GOVERNOR TOUCHED BY THE SAD PLIGHT OF MANY CONVICTS

"If I Live Out My Term I Will Free Stripling and Many Others, Who Have Been Sufficiently Punished," He Says.

WILL ASK COMMISSION TO MAKE INVESTIGATION

"Everything Else Fades Into Background Compared With My Experience in Tubercular Wards," States Governor Harris.

The people of Georgia Saturday got an intimate view of their chief executive, Governor Nat E. Harris, as a result of his expressed opinions at the state prison farm and reformatory, where, after a personal investigation, he declared that he would make it one of the big features of his program, whole governor to alleviate the suffering, to right wrongs and restore to families and friends their loved ones now serving time at the state prison farm.

Moved by the scenes at the prison farm, Governor Harris announced last night on his return to Atlanta that he would send a special message to the general assembly, probably next Friday, when he will recommend radical reforms, and will probably ask for an appropriation of at least $50,000 for needed improvements.

The governor was particularly impressed with the fact that many of the prisoners are old men, feeble and emaciated, unfit for work, incapable of further crime, yet held behind the bars by the strong arm of the law.

WORSE THAN BEING DEAD.

"Poor fellows! Some of them have been at the farm twenty-five or thirty years; their former friends and associated have forgotten them. It is worse than being dead," said the governor. "I asked some of them why they wanted their liberty, when they could remain at the farm and be supported by the state.

"That word 'liberty' has a stronger meaning to one of those men than it does to outsiders, and in reply to my query, they would say, 'Oh, governor, promise me to be free again. We promise not to be a charge on the state if released. We will make it through the remaining years in some manner.'"

The governor stated that he would ask the prison commission to determine how many infirm prisoners there are, how long they have served and whether or not they can be released. He said he would release all such prisoners recommended by the commission.

No feature of the farm so touched the heart of the governor as the tuberculosis wards, where forty-eight prisoners are confined.

"My heart bled for those poor creatures, doomed beyond the aid of man," said the governor. "Their piteous appeals for freedom still ring in my ears. There were men and women, too, lifetimers, stricken by the dread disease, who were mere skeletons asking for liberty." Tears rolled down the cheeks of the governor as he told of his visit to this ward.

KEPT CLEAN.

"The tubercular wards were spotlessly clean and well appointed; in fact they were in much good condition that I remarked that it appeared they had been put in order because the governor was paying a visit. I learned later that they were always in good order.

"I asked some of the poor creatures why they wanted to leave where they are getting the best attention possible. With tears in their eyes they all said they wanted to go home to die. The fear of dying in the penitentiary, it appeared, was almost as painful as the disease.

"While inspecting these wards a young man, a handsome, intelligent appearing fellow, came to me and placing a letter in my hands said, 'Governor, I won't have time to talk with you but I want you to read this when you go home and see if you can't help me get back to my loved ones out west.'"

One of the governor's first acts on returning home was to read the appeal of that young man, who said he had come to Georgia from the west, had gotten in wrong and was sent up for five years. After serving only a short period he contracted tuberculosis and the doctors said he could not live long, and would probably not serve out his time.

ALLEVIATE SUFFERING.

"Can I turn down those poor unfortunate people?" said the governor. "No, I shall lend my efforts to saving many of them, and so long as I am within the law and not defeating the ends of justice, I shall seek to alleviate their suffering and restore them to their families.

"I asked one poor fellow why he was in the prison and he replied: 'For murder.' I looked into his emaciated face and at his skeleton form and my thought was, how terrible is the punishment that has been placed upon him—incarcerated for life by the laws of man, and then doomed by the laws of nature.

"The day's investigation has been one of interest from start to finish; I have learned much that I expect to use for the good of Georgia; my secretaries secured data at my dictation upon every matter that came under my observation, but the Frank case, the Stripling incident and everything else fades into the background compared with my experience in the tubercular wards.

"No matter how long I may live,

Charges a "Joke," Declare Probers Of Judge Russell

Witnesses Called by W. T. Moyers to Testify Against Appellate Court Chief Justice Praise Him Instead.

The investigation of the charges against Judge Richard B. Russell, chief justice of the court of appeals, made by Attorney W. T. Moyers, a discharged stenographer of the court, fell to the ground yesterday.

The house committee appointed to make the investigation refused to allow Judge Russell to offer any evidence, although the judge's attorney, George Westmoreland, was ready with any amount of it.

The investigation really turned out to be an attempt on the part of Moyers to prove that he ought not to have been discharged as court stenographer, and on more than one occasion members of the committee had to tell him "get a line on Judge Russell."

Although the several pages of printed matter that embraced the charges contained all sorts of assertions and denunciations, the so-called charges summed up briefly were these:

"That Judge Russell stole a typewriter; that he stole a map of the state of Georgia; that he 'held out' a part of his stenographer's salary for graft; that he got a stenographer to write some of his legal opinions."

The committee announced it would render a written opinion next Monday, but they individually stated that the whole thing had been a farce.

Moyer took the matter seriously. He had summoned as witnesses all the judges of the court of appeals, several statehouse officials, and even called up an ex-justice of the supreme court. Among the witnesses were Judge Peyton L. Wright, Judge Nash R. Broyles, Judge J. R. Pottle and Judge A. J. Cobb.

Not only did these witnesses deny every allegation that Moyers made, but they eulogized Judge Russell, and said he was a most excellent judge and a man of the highest integrity.

Moyers asked Judge Pottle very seriously:

"Did you ever find it necessary to take some of your stenographer's salary?"

"Well, I didn't."

Moyers called upon Miss Mary Bloodworth and Miss Willie Bellair to tell about Judge Russell holding out their salaries, but their testimony was that they got all that was coming to them and wanted more.

Judge Ben Hill was called for, and he said Judge Russell was a fine judge and honest man.

Judge Arthur Powell testified the same way.

Yet Moyers went on with his case, for he represented himself, and tried to show why he ought not to have been "fired."

Praise for Russell.

He called upon Logan Bleckly, clerk of the court of appeals, and got more praise for Judge Russell.

He asked the sheriff of the court, P. W. Derrick, to take the stand, and the sheriff told what a good and excellent man Judge Russell was.

In his charges he said that Hamilton Douglas, Jr., knew about the graft, but Mr. Douglas indignantly denied that he had even ever dreamed of such a thing.

All of this was Moyers' evidence.

The committee retired for a few minutes and upon returning announced that they did not care to hear from Judge Russell.

"The whole thing is absurd and ridiculous," stated a member of the committee, and the others laughed and said that about sized up the matter.

STRIKE COMES TO END AT REMINGTON PLANT

Bridgeport, Conn., July 24.—With the ratification tonight by the machinists of the agreement reached between the labor leaders and the Remington Arms and Ammunition company and the Stewart Construction company, the strike at the arms company's plant today came to an end and the men will be back at work Monday. The Structural Iron Workers took similar action during the day.

The agreement provides for a regular weekly schedule of forty-eight hours for both day and night shifts, beginning August 1, any time worked in excess of these hours to be regarded as overtime, for which extra pay will be given. All employees who were involved in the trouble are to be taken back and the lay will not be less than was in vogue prior to the trouble.

GRIP OF TEUTONS BEING TIGHTENED ON POLISH CAPITAL

NAREW RIVER CROSSED BY THE GERMAN FORCES

And the Fortresses of Rozan and Pultusk Stormed—Germans Also Claim a Crushing Victory in Southern Courland.

London, July 24.—The Austro-German armies have been unable to force the Russians from important positions west of Warsaw and from the line along the Lublin-Cholm railway, but German victories in northern Poland and north of the Polish capital have tightened their grip on the city, and military critics say that the abandonment of Warsaw again becomes more probable.

The German forces have crossed the Narew river north of Warsaw and have a considerable weight of men on the south bank between the fortresses of Rozan and Pultusk, which a Berlin official statement describes as having been "stormed irresistibly." The communication, however, does not state whether the fortresses capitulated.

The fight in southern Courland, according to German claims, has resulted in something akin to a crushing victory, General von Buelow's forces having cut off the Russian retreat and delivered a body blow. It is stated that the Germans cut up the retiring troops badly, dispersing those which were not killed, wounded or captured.

RUSSIANS HOLD WARSAW FRONT.

That the Russians are holding the immediate Warsaw front is evidenced by a German official statement which refers to only minor operations in this area and tells of a comparatively insignificant number of prisoners taken. Military critics say this indicates that there have been no serious attacks, which probably means that the Germans are dug-in waiting reinforcements, while the Russians are risking nothing in counter attacks.

The report of the investment of Ivangorod is patently erroneous, as the Germans speak of attacks west of the city.

The Turks again have assailed the British left on the Gallipoli peninsula. The attacking party approached the British trenches with the snap that they have heretofore shown, but the Turks withered before the machine gun fire and the British lost no ground.

Today is the anniversary of Austria's ultimatum to Serbia, which was followed by the great war. The Serbian army has not been active for several months.

TEUTONS REPULSED, RUSSIANS CLAIM.

Petrograd, July 24.—(Via London, July 25.)—The following official statement was issued from general headquarters tonight:

"There has been no fighting in the Mitau region. On the Janichiki-Shavli-Rossiany front the enemy continued to advance eastward.

"On the Narew front an enemy attack on the left, back of the Pissa river, Thursday night was repulsed, despite his use of poisonous gas bombs. The enemy is straining every effort in an attempt to force the Narew in the Rozan-Pultusk sector and very stubborn fighting occurred here yesterday.

"The situation on the Vistula is unchanged. Attacks on our advanced positions at Novogeorgievsk and Ivangorod were repulsed. Between the Vistula and the Bug there was vigorous fighting in the direction of Lublin, where the enemy attempted an advance towards Belzyce.

"Severe fighting occurred on the Khimiek-Volodiavetz front. The Russians made numerous successful counter attacks on Thursday night penetrating as far as the enemy's artillery positions. Conditions of the fighting, however, did not permit of any of the guns which the enemy had of course left behind, away.

"In the region of Grubechow considerable forces were concentrated by the enemy who succeeded in advancing somewhat to the northward after severe engagements.

"Fighting on the Bug in the region of Sokal continued yesterday. New German troops were reported as having arrived.

"Our destroyers in the Black sea have bombarded a Turkish cavalry camp in the region of the Bosphorus, inflicting losses on the enemy and causing an explosion of a supply train."

GERMANS EXPECT DECISIVE BATTLE.

Berlin, July 24.—(Via Wireless to Sayville, L. I.)—The Overseas News agency gives out the following for publication:

"The German people are expecting a decisive battle on the Russian front, the result of which may decide the war. Within two days the Austro-Germans have made 150,000 prisoners."

RUSSIANS RETREAT, AUSTRIANS REPORT.

Vienna, July 24.—(Via London, July 25, 12:15 a. m.)—The following Austrian official statement regarding the progress of hostilities was given out here tonight:

"As a consequence of the victorious attacks of Archduke Joseph Ferdinand's army in the last few days, the enemy yesterday evacuated positions between the Vistula and Bystritza rivers for a breadth of 40 kilometers (about 27 miles) and retreated between night and ten kilometers northward on a prepared line. His efforts to gain a footing on positions also previously prepared in the intervening ground were baffled by the vigor of our pursuit. The number of prisoners captured by the archduke's army was increased to 45 officers and 11,500 men.

"North of Grubechow the German forces penetrated the enemy's position.

BIRDSEYE VIEW OF WARSAW.

Warsaw is a railway junction of lines radiating east and west—three in one general direction and four in the other. The easterly ones go to Petrograd via Bialystok, Grodno and Wilna to Siedlic, and to Ivangorod and Lublh and along the Galician frontier. Thus most of the supplies that have reached the Russian army retreating through Galicia have had to pass through Warsaw. The three lines on the west go to Ostrolenka, on the east Prussian frontier, to the German fortress of Thorn via Lowicz and Kutno, and to Pietrkow via Skiernlewice. These last concentrating lines have measurably aided the Germans to bring a large body of troops to the western side for a distance of twenty miles. Due west of the city there is a broad marsh over which the guns of the outer forts have full play; northwest and southwest there were forests which, being leveled in the early days of the war, now form similar difficult approaches. In the accompanying illustration is shown a birdseye view of Warsaw, with a bridge over the Vistula.

ALL SECTIONS UNITE IN PLAN TO BETTER FARMS IN GEORGIA

State Branch of Southern Settlement and Development Organization Formed at Meeting at Tybee.

PURPOSE TO COLONIZE IDLE ACRES OF STATE

Directors Are to Be Named Soon—Meeting Is Largely Attended by Prominent Citizens From All Sections.

Savannah, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—After hearing a number of prominent southerners discuss the best means of developing Georgia agriculturally nearly two hundred leading Georgians at the statewide meeting at Tybee today voted unanimously to organize a Georgia branch of the Southern Settlement and Development Organization of Baltimore, through which it is hoped to induce many desirable farmers to come to this state to people idle farming lands.

To J. W. Motte, president of the Savannah Board of Trade, under whose auspices the meeting was held, was entrusted the task of appointing a state board of directors. A meeting then will be called and a plan for raising funds and starting the campaign for more farmers will be started.

Mr. Motte said he will make the appointments as soon as possible, but that because of the importance of the work the greatest care in selecting suitable men will be necessary. It is probable it will be late next week at the earliest before the appointments will be made.

Entire State Represented.

The adoption of the resolution was a fitting culmination of the gathering at which met from all parts of the state leaders in their counties who were outspoken in favor of any feasible plan to develop the state agriculturally. It was introduced by Clark Howell, of Atlanta. Immediately representatives of a half-dozen trade bodies in different cities were on their feet to second the motion, and it was carried by a unanimous vote.

Before reading the resolution Mr. Howell indorsed the Southern Settlement and Development Organization, the objects of which were explained in a paper read by S. Davies Warfield, its president and chairman of the board of directors of the Seaboard Air Line railroad.

Few of those present knew anything of the inner workings of the organization. They were there because they believed in the vast possibilities of Georgia and favored any plan that would bring desirable farmers to settle on the thousands of acres of rich lands now idle.

All Agreed on Purpose.

Speakers differed as to whether it is better to go in for diversification of crops on a larger scale and raise less cotton or to stick to the staple that they and their fathers have raised so long, but all agreed that something must be done to place the state where it belongs in the ranks of agricultural states of the union—and that is to get more farmers. They also agreed that intensified farming and cutting up the larger plantations into small

Locks Liquor Victim In Cell With "Drunk" To Cure Drink Habit

With bleary eyes, unkempt hair and shuffling manner, Joe Smith, one of Atlanta's human derelicts, appeared before Judge Johnson in police matinee Saturday afternoon. It was the third time in as many days that Smith had appeared before the recorder, each time begging for the clemency that has kept him from prison in the past.

With pleading eyes and trembling voice he begged to be released, stating that he hadn't meant to go wrong, but that one drink had led to another until his appetite had gained complete control over him.

Visions of a new and better life in which Joe would become a clean and respected citizen of Atlanta, were painted for his honor by the prisoner.

Judge Johnson had listened to the same tale so many times that he could almost recite it backwards. Each time he had wanted to believe Joe and wanted to set him right and had therefore given him one more chance.

"I declare Joe, I don't know what to do with you," said the judge as he bent a troubled gaze at the prisoner. "The only thing I haven't tried yet is to let you see just how you act and look at close quarters when you are drunk. I think I will lock you up with Willis Bolo, another of your class, who is downstairs, drunk as you can never hope to be."

Despite his promises of reformation and expressed regrets for having fallen, Joe was taken to the cell and locked up with Bobo, where they were left debating the ownership of a cigarette "duck," found in their cell.

MAN FATALLY CUT BY WHITE ROBBERS

Two Bold Highwaymen Hold Up and Rob John Head at an Early Hour Sunday Morning.

John Head, aged 24, of 118 Estoria avenue, was held up and robbed by two white men at an early hour Sunday morning while returning from calling upon a friend. The hold-up took place at the corner of Estoria avenue and Gaskill avenue.

Mr. Head was stabbed once in the side just under the heart and his right arm was deeply gashed when he resisted efforts of the men to search him.

At an early hour Sunday morning he was in a critical condition and little hope was held for his recovery by the Grady hospital physicians.

NO MORE RASH USE OF UNDERSEA BOATS AGAINST NEUTRALS

SOME SHARP CRITICISM OF THE AMERCAN NOTE

Berlin, July 24.—(Via London, July 25, 2:35 a. m.)—The text of the American note has not yet been published in Berlin, but the afternoon papers print a fairly exhaustive authoritative summary. For the most part the papers reserve comment until the full text of the note is known.

The Lokal Anzeiger, in an apparently inspired article, asserts its confidence that Germany in utilizing its submarines in the future will endeavor to combine advantage for Germany with the least possible detriment to neutral interests, and expresses the belief that the American note will furnish ground for further negotiations.

To Continue Use of Submarines.

After pointing out the friendly form of the note, The Lokal Anzeiger says:

"The questions raised in the note must naturally be considered carefully by the German authorities; therefore it is impossible for the time being to forecast the answer. The British version indicating that America considered the note as the final word in the negotiations is entirely unfounded.

"After the previous negotiations the confidence, in any case, is justified that Germany will continue to employ her valuable submarine weapon, over which the present differences of opinion have arisen, in a manner useful to us and least damaging for neutrals. We had and have naturally no interest in ar-

UNDER SEARCHLIGHTS MEN WORK IN THE HULL TO REMOVE THE BODIES

Several Persons Found Alive After Ship Had Lain at River Bottom for Hours. Baby Girl Is Found by the Divers—Cause of Accident Not Yet Determined—The Eastland's Design Said to Have Been Faulty.

Chicago, July 24.—A thousand persons lost their lives in the Chicago river today by the capsizing of the excursion steamer Eastland while warping from its wharf with more than 2,400 employees of the Western Electric company and their relatives and friends on board, bound for a pleasure trip across Lake Michigan.

After working ceaselessly all day and far into the night, the bodies of 842 victims of the catastrophe, most of them women and children, were collected in temporary morgues and taken to the Second regiment armory. When these bodies had been tagged, Coroner Hoffman, taking into consideration estimates of bodies thought to be in the hold of the steamer, lying on its side in the river, and in the stream itself, said he had hopes that the total dead would not exceed 1,000.

SHIP CAPSIZED IN FIVE MINUTES.

The Eastland, said by marine architects to have been top-heavy and ballasted in an uncertain manner, turned over inside of five minutes after it began to list, pouring its gala passengers into the river, or imprisoning them in its submerged hull.

Every effort was made by thousands of persons on the river wharf to rescue the drowning men, women and children, but many went down almost within grasp of the river bank. Mothers went to their death with their children were snatched to safety. Other children died in the arms of their parents who finally were saved. Hundreds of girls freed for a day from their tasks of making telephones and other electrical apparatus in the factory of the Western Electric company, dressed in their smartest white frocks, drowned miserably.

PALL OF SORROW OVER WEST SIDE.

A pall of sorrow hung tonight over the entire West Side of Chicago, where the majority of the victims lived.

Kolin avenue, a small street near the factory of the Westerg Electric company, was in universal mourning. Every house lost from one to all its occupants in the disaster. And many of the residents of this street tonight lay in the morgue, or aided in the search of the Eastland, over which searchlights shot their blinding glare while hundreds of men searched for more bodies.

Efforts to discover the cause of the accident were begun long before the

CONTEMPT CHARGE MADE AGAINST JUDGE TINDALL

Judge W. W. Tindall, head of the juvenile court system, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Beasley were cited to face Judge George L. Bell on contempt of court charges yesterday, following proceedings instituted by Attorney J. McSwain Woods in behalf of Mrs. Minnie Falkenburg.

Mrs. Falkenburg is the mother of Grace and Daisy Falkenburg, aged 6 and 13, respectively, who are alleged to have been taken in custody by the juvenile court officials. The younger daughter was given to Mrs. Beasley, it is charged, and the elder sent to the county home for correction.

It is charged by counsel for the mother that a restraining order was obtained preventing the removal of the children from the jurisdiction of Fulton superior court, and that the order has been violated, one of the girls now being in Jacksonville with Mr. and Mrs. Beasley, and the other residing in McDonough.

VICE SPREADING FAST IN ATLANTA, STATES WATKINS

According to M. S. Watkins, who is connected with one of Atlanta's renting agencies, vice is spreading in the city despite efforts on the part of Chief Beavers to suppress immoral conduct.

Mr. Watkins made the statement concerning the "naughtiness" of Atlanta when he appeared as a witness in the trial of Ruth Walton and Mrs. Lillian Peters, of Columbia, S. C., and J. G. Lovett, an automobile salesman, arrested by Officer Barfield Friday noon.

The officer stated that he had found the three in an apartment at 49 Washington street wearing far less clothes than the law allows. Each of the three was fined $5 and costs.

MRS. B. E. CARROLL ORDERED TO MOVE BY THE RECORDER

The case against Mrs. B. E. Carroll, charged with running a disorderly house at 42 Walton street, which has been running in police court for four consecutive days, was at last decided by Recorder Johnson in police matters Saturday afternoon, when Mrs. Carroll was found guilty and ordered to be held to await action of the grand jury under a $500 bond and was given thirty days to move from her present residence.

MAN KILLED BY TRAIN WAS ROCKMART CITIZEN

The man found dead in the western end of the Inman Yards, Thursday night, by county police officers, was identified Saturday morning as James Marshall Thomason, age 27, of Rockmart, Ga., by his father, J. M. Thomason, who came to Atlanta after reading accounts in the newspapers, and identified his son's body at the H. M. Patterson undertaking establishment. The body was severed in half by a train.

The remains were removed to Rockmart Saturday, where funeral and interment will be held.

PICNIC TO BE HELD BY JUNIOR ORDERS

On next Saturday, July 31, the Junior Order Councils of Riverdale, Kenwood, Morrow and College Park will hold a picnic at Jester's old mill, near Jonesboro. These joint organizations have invited a large number of their friends, and a good time has been promised to them. Advanced notices of the picnic declare there will be boat riding, bathing, foot racing, dancing, speaking by Colonel George M. Napier and Colonel Walter P. Andrews.

There will be a big dinner spread on the grounds, and in the afternoon a ball game will be pulled off. The Junior Orders invite everybody to the picnic, and say that good order is assured.

MARIETTA MASONS WILL ACT AS HOSTS

Kennesaw lodge, No. 33, Free and Accepted Masons, of Marietta, will be the host for a large gathering of Masons on August 6, when a special program has been arranged.

There will not be any degree work, but the lodge will have as its guests all candidates who have received the third degree this year. The speakers of the evening will be Pastmaster Charles E. Robertson, of Palestine lodge, and Pastmaster Raymond Daniel, of Gate City lodge.

GOV. HARRIS TO SPEAK AT AD MEN'S DINNER

Election of Officers Will Take Place at Annual Meeting Thursday.

Governor Nat E. Harris will be the honor guest and principal speaker at the annual meeting of the Ad Men's club, which will be held Thursday evening, July 29, at 7 o'clock, at the Ansley hotel. While Governor Harris has not announced his subject, it is understood that he will talk along lines of special interest to the ad men in their daily business life. It is well known that the governor is taking particular interest in the ad men and their work, and the announcement that he will address the club will be received with interest and enthusiasm.

The dinner to be held on this occasion is tendered by the Atlanta Ad Men's club to its members, and it is earnestly desired that there be a full attendance of the membership. The annual election of officers will take place. The club is planning to compliment the retiring president, St. Elmo Massengale, who has rendered faithful and untiring service during the past year.

There will be other matters of importance also brought up for discussion, among them the bill now pending before the house to prevent fake and fraudulent advertising. The ad men were very much gratified over the unanimously favorable report of the judiciary committee on their bill, and feel confident of its final passage. Another source of gratification is the fact that Governor Harris has expressed decidedly favorable views upon the bill in question.

Governor Nat Harris To Be Guest Tuesday At Gate City Lodge

Governor Nat E. Harris will be the guest of Gate City lodge, No. 2, Free and Accepted Masons, Masonic temple, Tuesday evening. The Master Mason degree will be conferred in full form, and Governor Harris, who is a past-master of Macon lodge, No. 5, of Macon, where he has been a member 42 years, will address the lodge and also meet the brethren at an informal reception.

The lodge will convene at 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon, when the first and second sections of the degree will be conferred. The lodge will reconvene at 8 o'clock for the regular business session, after which the third section of the degree will be conferred.

The lodge will be presided over by Pastmaster Joseph Gregg, Jr., in the absence of Worshipful Master Henry C. Heinz, who has been attending the Shrine conclave in Seattle. Pastmaster Gregg will confer the first two sections of the degree. The third section will be conferred by Pastmaster J. LeRoy Duncan. Governor Harris, who will then speak, will be introduced by Pastmaster Raymond Daniel.

FELDER TO REPRESENT WILBER AGENCY HERE

Atlanta Lawyer Will Have Charge of Territory of Nine States.

Thomas B. Felder has been selected by the Wilber Mercantile Agency, one of the biggest of its kind in the country, as their southern district representative to control a territory composed of Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Tennessee, North and South Carolina and Maryland.

Mr. Felder's headquarters will be in Atlanta. He will have associated with him as general manager of the district division C. V. Hohenstein, an active practitioner now associated with Mr. Felder in legal affairs. He will have general supervision and active charge of details of the Atlanta office.

J. F. Burkhalter, who has had an active experience in mercantile collections for ten years in varied sections of America, will be field superintendent.

The Wilber Mercantile agency's head office is in Chicago, with branch offices in New York, St. Louis, Boston, Detroit, Cleveland and Kansas City. It commands a roster of capable attorneys in every important city in the United States.

The agency was organized in 1872 and is rated as one of the largest and most representative commercial collecting and reporting agencies in operation. In addition to commercial collections handled from all parts of the world, the agency has a commercial reporting department similar in its general features to that operated by Bradstreet and Dun. It also operates an insurance reporting department.

Cochran Much Worried About That Polar Bear, But It Was All a Joke

Visions of an ice bill such as would bankrupt the park department were had by Park Manager Joe Cochran Saturday upon receipt of a postcard purporting to be from Councilman George Freeman, chairman of the park committee, who is in Indianapolis, Ind., on business. The card, which the park manager found in his mail at noon, contained the following:

"Have acquired and am sending by express two ant bears. About closed trade for two elks and a fine bear, to be shipped next week. Please honor draft."

Although the park manager has taken a more than ordinary interest in stocking the Grant park zoo with animals, he was greatly agitated to learn that Councilman Freeman had taken such action without authority from the park board, so he rushed to the office of Park Attorney Walter Taylor, where he met Councilman Claude Ashley and told him his troubles.

"Man, have you gone wild? You know we have no money for those animals, but could use one elk if cheap. Kill that bear order if possible."

Mr. Cochran was told that a refrigeration plant would be necessary if the polar bear was brought to this climate, and that such a plant would mean a vast outlay of money.

The park manager called the express office several times during the afternoon to learn whether or not any of the animals had arrived. He said he would make the best of it if they had already been sent. Leaving for his home late in the afternoon, he said the mayor had made an unwise selection in placing George Freeman on the park committee.

For the benefit of park patrons and to relieve the suspense of the park manager, it might be explained that the postcard in question was received by Councilman Ashley, who erased the original message of Councilman Freeman and placed instead the message as set forth above. He is now awaiting with interest the answer of Councilman Freeman to Mr. Cochran's telegram.

How to Fight Tuberculosis

Dr. J. W. Carhart, of San Antonio, Texas, says: "Since lime salts constitute three-fourths of all the mineral substances of the human body, they must be supplied in the foods or supplemented in mineral preparations, or natural starvation ensues, with tuberculosis unchecked. The spread of tuberculosis and other preventable diseases is due largely to decalcified (lime lacking) conditions of multitudes throughout the civilized world."

Since lime is one of the ingredients of Eckman's Alterative, much of its success doubtless is due to its combination in such a way as to render it easily assimilable.

Eckman's Alterative has effected remarkable results in tuberculosis, which, in many instances, apparently has yielded to it, and since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, it is safe to try.

Notice to Charge Customers—All goods purchased on Monday and thereafter will be charged on your August account, payable September first.

Nothing of Nature Is Mismatched

Summer is shining on the hills and haunting the low levels of the ripening berry fields, where little brown elves of black-headed children and their mothers spend the sunny hours filling the baskets to be emptied on our breakfast tables.

Hot as the days are, the nights come cool, as though they were ordained to be comforters of suffering humanity, particularly the babies and their mothers.

So We Try to Regulate Our Store

To devise ways whereby the greater volume of business can be handled to the wide satisfaction of the customer is our constant thought, for as the customer's satisfaction broadens, so broadens the store's helpfulness—one begets the other; and, like the ripple of water made by a stone thrown into the still pool, the effect is far-reaching.

Shall not all of us try to make the holidays agreeable and enjoyable with the summer things of these days at the minimum of cost and the maximum of comfort?

FIVE CENTS ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY MORNING, JULY 25, 1915. FIVE CENTS

THE most horrible war of all ages is a war of the nerves. Not bullets of lead, nor bullets of silver; not numbers of men nor ability in those who command; not the greatest supplies of ammunition nor superiority in bigness of guns, but nerves, nerves, nerves and nothing else are going to decide which way the awful catastrophe in which Europe is plunged is going to end.

General von Hindenburg, himself the cold, calculating, hard military genius, who thrice overwhelmed the Russians with awful slaughter, maintains this. Neither armies nor generals will win the war, is his belief. The nation whose people have the calmest, hardest nerves will be triumphant, he asserts with compelling conviction.

American scientists who have carefully studied the war from this side, from the side of its horrors and the effect they will have upon the present generation and generations to come, from the side of the mind and of insanity, are a unit in asserting that Europe will be peopled with subnormal men, with physical and mental wrecks for years to come.

Modern warfare is more horrible than any warfare that ever has been waged in the previous history of the world. It has grown so awful in its engines of destruction and its constant strain on mind and body that the most famed descriptions of inferno do not begin to approach its horrors. Its awfulness is beyond belief.

"Surely the struggle that is now tearing Europe asunder has a meaning deeper than the official dispatches reveal," says Waldemar Kaempffert, managing editor of the Scientific American. "Think of Ypres and Neuve Chapelle, of Lemberg and the River San; then think of the defectives to be born in this country whose grandfathers lost their grip upon themselves in northern France or western Russia in 1915 and became hysterics or mental defectives. Then you will know how terrible is the price that we, too, must pay because war, in the opinion of General von Hindenburg, is a combat of nerves.

"Ghastlier than the torn and bleeding forms that strew the battlefields of Europe, ghastlier than the blinded eyes and the crushed breasts and the faces mutilated beyond all recognition are the shattered minds and nerves of men who have sniped barbed wire under the fire of machine guns and cowered in the trenches while shrapnel burst overhead. The medical journals of England, France and Germany have already published preliminary accounts of mental derangements never seen in times of peace. Read them and you will agree with Von Hindenburg.

"Imagine men pouring water into their boots to lessen the vibration of walking; imagine them screaming in agony at the mere rustling of a newspaper; imagine the frightful convulsions of epileptics whose unsuspected mental instability has been revealed by battle; imagine the hallucinations and the ravings of wretches unstrung by weary waiting in muddy shelters and strapped to hospital cots—imagine all this, and you have not imagined a tithe of the psychic terrors of war. No wonder that war is the mother of insanity.

"The tentacles of this terror clutch not only the men in the field, but noncombatants as well. When Paris was besieged in the war of 1870-1871 a veritable epidemic of mental diseases seized the people—something so new that the name 'siege madness' had to be coined in order to describe it. Of ninety-two children born in Paris during that frightful period of anguish, when the animals in the zoological gardens were slaughtered to provide food, sixty-four had mental and physical anomalies, and the remaining twenty-eight were feeble; twenty-one were imbeciles or idiots and eight were morally or emotionally insane. How awful will be the corresponding tale of this war! Verily the seeds of madness have been sown in devastated Europe. Whole nations are unstrung. A generation at least will be required to restore the nervous equilibrium of the losers.

"That the children of tomorrow must suffer for the shattered nerves of today follows as a matter of course. Statistics enough have been compiled to prove that insanity has increased alarmingly under peaceful industrial conditions—as much as 104 per cent, for example, in New York state alone, during the space of twenty years. What may be expected of the offspring of the men who emerge from this war with minds and bodies impaired?

"Herbert Spencer was one of the first to point out the truth, long since accepted by eugenists, that 'the ability to maintain individual life and the ability to multiply vary inversely.' In other words, the intellectually and physically unfit reproduce faster than the desirable elements of a community. Veterans with wrecked intellects or ruined nerves will marry, recking not of the social consequences; the state will not hold them in check. Latent mental defects which might never have manifested themselves will blossom forth because the shock of war is to them what a hothouse is to a plant; they will weigh heavily upon the next generation.

"We, too, must bear the burden. The tide of immigration which the United States may expect after the treaty of peace has been signed will carry with it much human wreckage that should be diverted before it reaches these shores. In times of peace we take the precaution of testing the intellectual fitness of Europeans at every port of entry. Our instruments and methods are rather crude—so crude that they reveal only the more conspicuously unfit. What we will soon need is some system of appraising the hordes that will descend upon us from southern Europe—some means which will enable us to determine whether the terrors of war have not so far undermined a racial stock that it may not be permitted to contaminate the healthy human protoplasm out of which real Americans are made."

Dr. George W. Crile, distinguished American surgeon who has served in French war hospitals, is another scientist who predicts a race of subnormal men and physical wrecks for the warring European states. Tens of thousands of men permanently disabled by rifle and shrapnel wounds will not be Europe's only heritage of human woe after the great war, he says. It is not the bullet alone that wrecks the bodies and the brains of soldiers.

Physically and mentally the mere shocks and horrors of the conflict are wrecking the soldiers by the thousands. The researches of Dr. Crile and other noted surgeons who have served in the military hospitals show that with negligible exceptions every man who has for any length of time been a witness to the battlefield and trench scenes has been impaired mentally and physically by the shocks and frights.

A race of subnormal men for several generations is their free prediction. How far down the line of generations the impairment of the brain will extend is a matter of conjecture. Of the thousands of wounded men examined by Dr. Crile not one has escaped permanent impairment of the brain service.

Nearly all, too, were suffering from physical shock, their nerve force was shattered and their body stamina reduced. These physical effects will be as permanent as the mental ones, the medical men believe.

So a race of subnormal men, mentally as well as bodily, is what every warring European nation fares. That their shattered brains and bodies will have an effect on coming generations for some time is to be taken for granted. Modern warfare has grown so awful in its engines of destruction and its constant strain on mind and body that henceforth war can only be a detriment in every way to a race instead of as in times past bringing out the courageous and sacrificing qualities that have redounded to the lasting benefit of a people.

Not only does warfare now, as in times past, kill off or cripple the very finest of a nation's manhood, but through the intensity with which it is now waged it reduces the physical and mental vigor of those who escape the bullets.

Germany, France and England have been compelled to establish a great number of insane asylums and of sanatoria for the treatment of nervous diseases. A traveler in Germany recently described a visit which he made to the nervous sanitarium at Eberswalde in Germany. The conditions he describes there may be taken as typical of the conditions existing in all the sanatoria the warring nations have established. He says:

"It was terrible, a vision from Dante's 'Inferno.' Here are patients who suffer from occipital cramp. If they do not die in twenty-four hours they recover. But recovery is slow. Seventy-five per cent of those affected are non-smokers.

"Many patients sit silent and depressed, with fixed unseeing eyes, suffering from temporary paralysis of the optic nerve. Others foam at the mouth, utter horrible oaths and gesticulate as far as the straight waistcoat permits them. Others with ghastly grins imitate the whistle of shells and clatter of machine guns. Even when they seem cured a suggestion of a return to the front provokes a violent return of the worst symptoms."

Many such sanatoria have been established throughout Germany and France. Such nervous diseases principally affect the intellectuals, officers and flower of the French and German troops.

Along with its sanatoria for nervous diseases and insanity the war has called forth numerous special hospitals for the treatment of special diseases and wounds, none of which are more interesting than the face and teeth hospitals, for the scientists have learned that the teeth are the basis of health, happiness and efficiency.

One of the most remarkable of these hospitals is that organized and directed by Professor Roemer, in Strassburg, Germany. It deals only with wounds of the face and mouth and has secured results that are almost miraculous.

A large proportion of the soldiers fighting in the trenches receives wounds in the face and mouth. If the condition of the German soldiers permits they are taken to the Roemer hospital. Here there is a staff that numbers fifty-five, and all the work, which includes the cooking, which is done by the wives and daughters of the professors, is performed without fee.

There are two sections to the hospital itself. In the first section a corps of twelve dentists examine the teeth of the soldiers, make the necessary extractions and later make plates. The German military authorities pay for this work because of the very reasonable point of view that a soldier with defective teeth cannot be thoroughly efficient.

work of rescue was over. Federal and county grand juries were ordered, a coroners jury was empanelled and all of the officers and crew of the Eastland were arrested.

W. C. Steele, secretary and treasurer of the St. Joseph-Chicago Steamship company, who owned the Eastland, built on Lake Erie in 1903 and remodeled later, because topheavy, it is said, was arrested tonight and locked up at a police station. The steamer was leased by the Indiana Transportation company, whose officers said they were not responsible for the licensing of the ship and did not control the crew.

MANY CORPSES STILL IN HULK.

During the day more than 700 bodies were taken from the river and from the hull of the overturned steamer, the sides of which were cut open to admit divers.

Several persons were taken alive from the cabins after the ship had lain of its side in the river for four hours, but the 300 others said to be in the hulk are all dead.

Under the glare of searchlights tonight scores of men worked in the hull of the vessel to remove the bodies. The steamer lay on the bottom of the river, one side protruding like a monument to the hundreds it had drowned as it turned over.

The cause of the capsizing had not been determined tonight, but federal and state officers were conducting investigations to determine whether the ship was too-heavy from faulty designing, was improperly ballasted or was poorly handled in leaving the wharf.

EASTLAND FAULTY IN HER DESIGN.

Marine architects asserted that the Eastland was faulty in design, that the top deck had been removed because of the tendency of the ship to list and also pointed to the possibility that the ship had been unevenly, or insufficiently ballasted.

The Eastland used water ballast, so that it could pump out some on entering shallow lake harbors, so some investigators are working on a theory that the ballast tanks were not filled and the rushing of passengers to one side of the decks caused it to roll over.

Under misty skies 7,000 men, women and children went to the Clark street dock early today to fill five large lake steamers with holiday mirth in a trip to Michigan City. The steamer Eastland was the first to be loaded.

Rain began to fall as the wharf superintendents lifted the gangplanks from the Eastland, declaring that the government limit of 2,500 passengers had been reached.

ropes were ordered cast off and the steamer engines began to hum. The Eastland had not budged, however.

SHIP LURCHES TO HER DOOM.

Instead, the heavily laden ship wavered sidewise, leaning first towards the river bank. The lurch was so startling that many passengers joined the large concourse already on the river side of the decks.

The ship never heeled back. It turned slowly, but steadily towards its left side. Children clutched the skirts of mothers and sisters to keep from falling. Water began to enter lower port holes and the hawsers tore out the spiles to which the vessel was tied.

Screams from passengers attracted the attention of fellow excursionists on the dock awaiting the next steamer. Wharfmen and picnickers soon lined the edge of the embankment, reaching out helplessly toward the wavering steamer.

For nearly five minutes the ship turned before it finally dived under the swift current of the river. During the listing of the vessel life boats, chairs and other loose appurtenances on the decks slipped down the sloping floors, crushing the passengers towards the rising waters.

Then there was a plunge with a sigh of air escaping from the hold, mingled with crying of children and shrieks of women and the ship was on the bottom of the river, casting hundreds of living creatures to the water.

HUNDREDS CAME TO THE SURFACE.

Many sank, entangled with clothing and bundles and did not rise, but hundreds came to the surface, seized floating chairs and other objects. Persons on shore threw out ropes and dragged to those who could hold these lifelines. Employees of commission firms along the river threw crates, chicken coops and other floatable objects into the water, but most of these were swept away by the current.

Boats put out, tugs rushed to the scene with shrieking whistles and many men jumped into the river to aid the drowning. With thousands of spectators ready to aid and the wharf within grasp hundreds went to death despite every effort at rescue.

One mother grasped her two children in her arms as she slipped from the steamer into the water. One child was torn from her, but she and the other were saved. Fathers were drowned after aiding their wives and children to safety.

One man was seen to cling to a spike in the side of the wharf while two women and three children stepped up his body to safety. He fell exhausted into the river as the last one of the five reached the pier.

Instances of heroism were almost as numerous as the number of persons on the scene. Boats as soon as full took rescued passengers to the wharf or to the steamer Theodore Roosevelt, which was tied up opposite the Eastland.

DIVERS DESCENDED FOR THE CORPSES.

In an hour the water was cleared of excursionists. Those who had not been taken to land had sunk or were swirling deep in the river toward the drainage canal locks at Lockport, Ill., many miles away. The locks were closed to stop the current and arrangements were made to take bodies from the river along its course through the southwest part of Chicago.

Shortly after the water was cleared, city firemen and workmen were on the exposed side of the Eastland's hull, cutting through its steel plates with gas flames. Divers were hurried into underwater suits. A tug was moored as a bridge between the Eastland had not budged, however.

As the divers gained entrance to the hulk the scene of distress moved for the time being from the river to the extemporized morgues. Warehouses of wholesale companies along the river were thrown open and bodies were placed in rows on the floors. Scores of persons rescued from the water were injured and these were taken to the Iroquois hospital, built in memory of the six hundred women, children and a few men who were burned and crushed to death in the Iroquois theater fire several years ago.

Efforts to resuscitate those taken from the river were generally unsuccessful. Only two or three were thus saved. It was also said that many of the injured would die.

TRAGEDY CAUSES CONSTERNATION.

The whole city was in consternation over the catastrophe. Word of the accident spread rapidly and to the thousands already at or near the wharf other thousands added themselves. The Clark street bridge near the wharf was crowded until it threatened to collapse. Streets had to be cleared by the police to allow the passage of ambulances.

Business men sent their automobiles and motor trucks to help aid the injured and to carry away the dead. One warehouse soon was filled with bodies and other were taken to the second regiment armory, a mile away.

Mayor William Haie Thompson was also on the scene and Chief of Police C. C. Healey was also out of town, but during the day Mayor Moorhouse sent a request that the city display signs of mourning. Flags on public buildings were placed at half-mast and many places were draped with mourning. Baseball games were postponed and festivities largely ceased.

While those on land were disposing of the dead, injured and rescued, the divers in the heart of the sunken vessel sent up an almost constant stream of corpses from the submerged decks. First it was a gaily dressed girl in white waist who had been caught between a pile of chairs and a cabin wall. Next it was a slight boy, gathered from the lifeless arms of a fond father, who had clung to his offspring even in death. Then followed an old woman, who had gone aboard the ship to watch the youthful pleasure of her grandchildren, or a little girl with bare legs and bootees with gay ribbons sodden against the face of her holiday gown.

GIRL BABY FOUND ALIVE.

One thrill passed through the crowd as word came from the steamer that a girl baby had been found alive among the hundreds of dead in the ship. The child was discovered in a starboard stateroom, where she had been held from the water by a chair that jammed against the berth. The baby only half awakened as it was carried to land. Its mother could not be found.

Two women were found alive in another stateroom in a protruding side of the Eastland, but there was no further hope that any number had escaped death in the trap. There were still 300 persons in the hold when these three persons were taken out alive, and the explorers of the hulk said that all were dead.

Work of tagging the bodies of the dead and placing them in accessible places for identification proceeded all day and night. Reports from various temporary morgues gave a total of 170 bodies, but tabulation became so confusing that it was decided to take all the bodies to the Second regiment armory so that those who were looking for lost friends and relatives could view all the victims in one place.

Identification was slow and scenes at the morgues were as affecting as those at the river when the steamer capsized. Mothers fell across the bier of children whom they had sent away a few hours before on what was intended to be a day of pleasure.

Men had to summon all the stoical qualities they possessed to retain their composure as they passed between rows of corpses, looking for missing children or wives.

U. S. GRAND JURY TO INVESTIGATE.

Yet appalled at the horror and heartache, officers of various departments attended to pressing duties of disposition of the dead and injured, tracing of the missing, inquiry into the cause of the disaster, and precautions against disease from sunken bodies and the carrying of corpses up the river toward the canal locks.

Federal Judge Landis ordered a grand jury impaneled to-day to begin the catastrophe; State's Attorney Hoyne prepared a county grand jury inquiry; Coroner Hoffman selected a jury to look into the cause of the deaths; the police arrested all officers of the Eastland, and the health commissioner arranged to purify the river for fear the disease might spread by the presence of so many bodies in the stream.

Arrangements also were made to get at the sunken vessel to determine the underlying causes of the accident. Derricks on scows were taken to the side of the Eastland and marine engineers were engaged to inspect the ship.

Those in charge of the various works of clearing up the toll of casualties and determining the responsibility for the disaster all said that they would let the endeavor would necessarily be slow because of the large number of persons believed to be in the hull and the difficulty of getting at the hull of the steamer.

EASTLAND WAS KNOWN AS CRANK OF THE LAKES

Chicago, July 24.—"The Eastland was the crank of the lakes," W. L. Wood, naval architect, who was called by the owners in 1903 to correct faults in the boat, declared today. In 1904 Wood made representations to Captain Ira Mansfield, local steamboat inspector, which resulted in an order to cut off the top deck of the vessel and to keep the water ballast compartments filled.

"The deck was cut off," Mr. Wood declared today, "but it would be impossible to fix the cause of the accident until it is known whether the other conditions were fulfilled.

"The design of the vessel would not permit its operation as do other vessels are operated, and great care had to be taken at all times.

"It was most important that the water ballast compartments should be filled at all times. It was also important that the passengers should not crowd on one side of the steamer.

"It seems to be evident that the passengers were not where they belonged when this accident happened.

"The fault in the Eastland was in the hull. I told the builders at the time I was called to inspect some parts of it that they were not properly designed.

"After the Eastland was completed $35,000 was spent to correct faults, but the inexcusable faults were in the hull and I got my first sight of it today as I saw the boat overturned in the river. There are certain fundamental principles applying to naval architecture which seemed not to have been carried out.

"The Eastland had almost no body at all and this was its main weakness.

85 BODIES TO THE ROW IN CHICAGO ARMORY

Chicago, July 24.—Bodies, long rows of them, 85 to the row, made the scene at the Second regiment armory something appalling to the uninitiated, and even to officials hardened to such scenes, the sight brought tears.

Ten long rows of blanketed victims met the eyes of the thousands who were allowed to enter this place of death shortly before 10 o'clock, and then were enacted heartrending scenes surpassed only by the disaster itself.

Preceding the admission of those who were seeking friends and relatives, the bodies were brought in and checked off with systematic precision, each being numbered and then laid in the particular row that the number called for. Two dozen physicians and undertakers working at improvised operating tables embalmed the bodies.

Carefully wrapped in blankets the victims presented a similar appearance until the crowd was admitted, when the blankets were turned back from the faces. Thousands had stood outside the armory. There was no disorder and the very silence of the assemblage emphasized the awful tragedy that had been enacted.

When the doors were thrown open the crowd was met by two lines of police officers and through this lane the seekers were forced to pass their way in single file. Squads of twenty-five were admitted at a time.

Shortly after the opening of the great morgue to the public the first identification took place. An elderly woman, accompanied by a young man, dropped on her knees, then fell moaning and wailing upon what proved to be the body of her daughter. Similar scenes followed fast and the line appeared to be ever on the increase.

When the large armory showed signs of becoming overcrowded preparations were made to convert the armory annex into the second general morgue. With practically all of the bodies in these two structures the coroner and police believed identifications would would be made rapidly.

The first squads admitted to the armory consisted mainly of the curious, and Coroner Hoffman, through a megaphone, cried out that he would arrest "in the name of decency" any one who entered the armory without reason other than the satisfaction of morbid curiosity.

As fast as the bodies were identified they were removed again to undertaking establishments to make room for others waiting outside in ambulances. There were more than 300 corpses in the armory when the first people were admitted, and within an hour fifty bodies were taken out and fifty more brought in.

Members of the crowd waiting outside the armory stormed the doors late tonight and the police were forced to use their clubs to drive them back. Several persons were injured, it was said.

COPIES OF JOKE PAPER FOUND ON MANY VICTIMS

Chicago, July 24.—The "July Jubilator," the official newspaper of employes of the Western Electric company advertising the picnic in Michigan City, Ind., that was prevented by the steamer Eastland disaster, was filled with jokes and cartoons of what might have taken place. Copies of the paper were found on many of the victims.

"Whoa!

"Readers of the Jubilator be jubilant!"

"Last time it was a submarine.

"There is no jonah about this.

"But it will be a whale of a success."

The fifth annual picnic of the employees was to have been the largest ever held.

A great parade in Michigan City with movlemen recording every event, athletic contests and other amusements had been provided.

Grabbed Girl by Her Hair And Saved Her From Death

Chicago, July 24.—Charles Williams, representative for a New York concern, stripped to his underclothes and plunged into the river. He saved a man who was choking to death.

Next he saw a young girl struggling in the middle of the river. Williams grabbed her by the hair, swam to a north side dock and helped her climb to safety. A man in a patrol boat yelled to him that another young woman had gone down at a spot he pointed out. Williams dived, found the girl and took her to shore, where a pulmotor revived her. Then he brought a 3-year-child to shore.

Mrs. Paulina Vantak, mother of three children, was among the drowned. Her children are believed to have been lost. Henry Vantak, her husband, was pulled out of the water.

"I could feel that the boat was turning over," Vantak said. "About a dozen of 150 persons on the upper decks jumped. The rest were thrown into the river.

"I did not see my wife or children after the boat turned. They were carried into the river with the crowd. Someone grabbed me around the neck and kept pulling me. It was a woman, but I could not save her."

Scores Plunged in Water.

Policeman Henry Sesher, one of the first to go to the rescue, said:

"I saw scores of men and women, many holding children, plunge into the water. I jumped into a rowboat and pulled out to the drowning. I think I got about fifty aboard.

"The fireboat and tugs hurried to the scene and picked up more than a hundred people."

Mrs. William Peterson, wife of a foreman at the Western Electric company, was pulled through a port hole of the ship to safety.

"I was pulled clear under water and when I came to the surface I saw two hands reaching out of a port hole. They pulled me through. I don't know whether my husband, daughter and sister-in-law were saved or not."

Merchants of the South Water street commission houses and their employees made many contributions when crates and bales were thrown to the victims struggling in the water and many saved themselves in this manner. Other merchants, with the aid of ropes and poles, pulled dozens from the stream.

Acetylene blowpipes were rushed to the boat and a gang of men, cutting a hole through the upturned steel side of the steamer was cheered on by hundreds of anxious relatives and friends, many of whom made attempts to force their way through the police lines.

Clung to Her Children.

Mrs. H. A. Thoyer, 32 years old, told of clinging to her two children, Harry, 5, and Helen, 3, and losing her husband, William Thoyer, had been pitched into the river. Mrs. Thoyer and Harry were rescued. She lost her hold on Helen and the daughter with Mr. Thoyer were believed to have been drowned.

"My husband and I and the children were standing together on the deck and all fell into the water in a heap," she said. "I am a good swimmer.

"I caught hold of Harry, and my little girl, Helen, and clung to them and kept myself up some way. I don't know how. I saw men and women tumbling into the water around me.

"My husband disappeared among them. I had Harry with my right arm, and Helen with my left. I seemed to lose all strength in my left arm and I had to let go of Helen. She went down in the struggling mass. Then someone—a man with a uniform on—grabbed me and began swimming with me. I clung to my son and when swept near the river bank some men pulled us up. Helen and her father must have gone down."

Mrs. Emma O'Donnell, of Berwyn, Ill., said:

"The steamer was getting ready to leave and was crowded with excursionists. The officers of the boat pushed back the crowds which were around the gang plank, in order to pull it in. I think this is what caused the boat to list. It never stopped after it started to roll and a few moments later it was out in the middle of the river on its side.

Saw Dozens Drown.

"I saw dozens of people drown around me, but was unable to give assistance. By a good effort I was able to climb on the upper side of the boat and managed to hold on until taken off by rescuers."

George Haber, who saw the accident from a pier, said:

"I was standing 100 feet away when the boat began to turn over. Some of the men on the boat were loosening some of the ropes. I noticed one heavy cable still fast to the stern. Then the boat began turning. It was several eight minutes in turning over on its side."

"Nine girls and I were in a stateroom having a little party of our own and all of a sudden we felt the boat going over," said Miss Lottie Anderson. "We all fell into a heap. Screams of women in the other staterooms were maddening. I fell into the water and did not see my sister or anyone of the others after that."

Jose Bronak was saved because his coat caught on a nail. "I was with a party of four and they were all drowned," said Bronak. "My coat caught on a nail when the boat went over and I was held above the water. If is had not been for the nail I would now be at the bottom of the river, I suppose, with the others of my party."

Among those rescued was W. J. Plamondon, an electrical engineer, and cousin of Charles A. Plamondon, who, with his wife, lost his life in the Lusitania disaster.

CONVICT APPEALS FOR BECKER'S LIFE

But Fails to Move Governor Whitman—Governor Says He "Caught Murphy in Lie." "Frame Up" Story Doubted

Albany, N. Y., July 24.—The personal appeal of Joseph Murphy, a Sing Sing convict, to Governor Whitman to save the life of that executive's friend, former Police Lieutenant Charles Becker, sentenced to be electrocuted next week for instigating the murder of Herman Rosenthal, failed of its purpose today.

The governor said he "had caught Murphy in a lie today," and branded as untrue Murphy's entire story that he had overheard Jack Rose, "Bridgie" Webber and Harry Vallon, three of the most important witnesses against Becker, conspire three years ago in the Tombs prison to plant perjury for the murder upon the condemned man.

Murphy, shackled to Deputy Warden Johnson of Sing Sing, was hurried from the mansion and back to the railroad station in one of the state automobiles. Its irons were loosened during the conference.

A transcript of the talk was sent to District Attorney Perkins, at New York, tonight. It will be used during the hearing before Justice Ford Monday on the application of Becker's attorneys for a new trial on the ground of new evidence. Murphy's story of the alleged plot in the Tombs formed one of the bases for the application.

During the conference the governor discovered that on July 1, 1912, Murphy had talked with Becker in the death cell in Sing Sing. In this way he gained admittance by posing as a singer of the Mutual Welfare League, the governor said. The following day W. Bourke Cockran, attorney for Becker, was informed by Murphy of the alleged conspiracy three years before.

Murphy told the governor that although he overheard the alleged conspiracy in 1912 he had not mentioned it to anyone until June 1. Of this year, except to a fellow-convict named Walker. The governor said Murphy's reticence was that he did not want to bring notoriety to his family, the governor declared.

TURKS ARE REPULSED AT THE DARDANELLES

Moslem Troops Charge the British Lines, But Are Driven Back.

London, July 24.—Official announcement was made here today that the Turkish forces at the Dardanelles have made a new attack on the allies and have been repulsed.

The statement follows:

"Sir Ian Hamilton reports that in the southern section about 3 p. m. yesterday the Turks attacked the northern trenches on our left, which we hold in force, but that neighborhood were shelled rather heavily.

"Under cover of the bombardment a small Turkish force advanced for our sapheads. Two of our machine guns at once opened fire and the survivors retired, leaving many dead and wounded lying in front of our trenches. Probably more were out of sight, as our shrapnel was effective.

"The whole affair lasted twenty minutes."

BRITISH GAINING IN SOUTHERN ARABIA.

London, July 24.—Further fighting in southern Arabia is reported in a British official statement issued today.

"Sheikh Othman, which the Turks withdrawn to Aden has been temporarily abandoned, was recaptured Wednesday," says the statement. "The Turks were easily expelled and were pursued for five miles. Sheikh Othman is now in possession and the civil population is fast returning. The Turks still are near Lasbi, but are said to be suffering from sickness.

"Our total casualties in the affair on Wednesday amounted to about twenty-five of all ranks."

Man, 63 Years Old, And a Woman of 35 Arrested in Office

E. S. Johnson, giving his age as 63 and his address as Capitol View, in company with a woman registering as Mrs. R. D. Russell, of 285½ Peachtree street, aged 35, were taken out of an office in the Hurt building at a late hour Saturday night.

Officers Wade and Austin made the arrest, and charged the couple with disorderly conduct.

LIGHT POWER MODEL AT LOWERED PRICE OFFER OF STEARNS

The F. B. Stearns company, Cleveland, Ohio, makers of Stearns-Knight cars, announce a lowered price on the Light Four model. The new price is $1,395.

At this lowered price the company offers the same car which sold during the year at $1,750—with improved body design and added mechanical refinements.

The Stearns-Knight Light Four is not an assembled car. It is wholly designed and is built entirely in Stearns shops, and holds the distinction of being the first Stearns-Knight motored car to sell under $2,000.

The Light Four model was placed on the market last year after three years spent upon the demand for a high-grade car as a moderate price, and produced in limited quantities only.

The tremendous popularity which this model gained in that year has caused the company to erect a new five-story building equipped with the finest facilities for producing this model in increased quantities, lowering the cost of production without loss of quality, and making it possible to reduce the selling price to $1,395.

The New Efficiency in Cows.

(From The World's Work.)

Selective breeding has wrought changes in animal types in the last few years that are revolutionary in their economic results. The cow that took the gold medal at the St. Louis exposition earned it by a record of 600 pounds of butter fat in a year. She could not even be entered for competition at the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco, the increase in average yield of milk has so increased. The best cows today produce 1,100 pounds of butter yearly—almost twice the best record at the time of the earlier exposition. Ten years ago, cattle were ready for slaughter at three or four years of age; today, there is no need to let the same weight at from one to two years of age. Ten years ago sheep were bred primarily for their wool; today, a type has been perfected that yields more wool and is better for mutton besides. Ten years ago, the average market age for hogs was from twelve to fourteen months; today the average market age is eight months. In other words, the time in which a farmer's investment in live stock begins to earn dividends has been cut almost in two.

WINNING SPIRIT KEEPS PHILLIES UP

McGraw Assigns This and Good Pitching as the Reasons They Are Still in the Hunt.

By JOHN J. McGRAW.
(Manager of the Giants.)

The question that has been asked me a hundred times in the last few weeks is what the Philadelphia club has this year to hold it up in the race. I would say pitching and winning spirit. I myself, expected to see it crack by July 4, as usual. So did most followers of baseball. Hence the frequent inquiries.

There is an interesting story as to how Morgn developed this new fighting, harmonious spirit. When Baker, the president of the club, decided to get a new manager for the Phillies, he left it up to the players to select the man. It lay between Lobert and Moran, and the vote showed the boys of the club were almost unanimous in favor of Pat. Of course, it was then necessary to let Lobert go, and the Giants got a grand third baseman, as a result.

The players on the Philadelphia club were naturally anxious for their selection to make good, and they have been pulling their heads off behind Moran. They've been showing the spirit which wins pennants and, if they can hold anything like their present pace, they are likely to be up there in the fight to the finish. Moran has had grand pitching, and he knows how to keep his twirlers working along at their best. He is one of the greatest men in the country to handle twirlers from the experience he had as a catcher.

Fight Was Along.

The best showing of the week has been made by the Philadelphia club. Its fight was a hard one all the way from first place again, after having been ousted by the Brooklyn club. It is not the past, when a Philadelphia team has been once pushed out of first place, the team has never been able to get the sand on the rails in time to stop it slipping on the soaped ones before it hit the second division. But the fact it pulled back this time indicates the spirit is doing wonders for the team. It has the fight in it combined with some good ball players and very high class pitching, as I have said.

As I have predicted, the Cubs are slumping. The team had never looked to me like a championship contender in the sense that the Braves were on the way into a world's championship last season, but nothing could be farther from the truth as far as my experience went. In spite of the general belief that ball players never open their mouths without letting some hard word slip, there is comparatively little talk on the diamond, even in the stress of a hard game, that would not be fit for a minister to hear.

What the Braves did do last season was to "rake" everything pretty hard, but they did this by picking out their weaknesses and personal vanities and keeping at them all over the lines. "Eddie" Collins was kidded about something in the world's series and so was "Rube" Oldring, but these deficiencies were put up to them without being garnished with words which would not be printed on asbestos paper.

"Hoo" doesn't seem to head as well as any umpire, and he has had his share of experience on the big league diamond, and is also a good judge of the deciding game of the series between Yale and Harvard. Some day several years ago and came back very much surprised.

"What's the matter, Bob?" I asked him.

"I thought those guys were amateurs playing for fun," he replied. "But the names they called one another made me believe they were playing for a million dollars each. I never heard such rough talking as long as I have been in the big league."

Braves Dangerous.

I still maintain that Boston club is the one which will finally fight for the first flag and the Giants, with Philadelphia looking more like a contender at every jump. This next western trip will be very important for us and should string the race out a little bit. The west is such that the Boston clubs are getting in shape where they can show their true form. The ones that look strongest along the early forced pressure will begin to crack, and a whole lot better baseball than is played in the National league race from this stage to the finish than has been exhibited so far. Everybody will cheerfully admit there is plenty of room for this combined improvement.

I count Cincinnati right out of the going at this writing. The Reds haven't a chance for the flag, at least. It is a great race for a dark horse to cross the pickets, and Pittsburgh or Chicago should be hurt again, and that is not at all unlikely. Boston would have a hard struggle holding the pace which is bound to follow to the end of the schedule. Brooklyn would have a hard time to finish first after the pace it has set, so far because of the false form in the league. I freely admit a couple of forced replacements would crimp us badly, especially in the pitching department where we are short of talent anyway.

On the outlook today, I would not say St. Louis has the best chance to cop, but Huggins is liable to bring the club home in the first division. It is a team of fighters. Any club of scrappers has at least an outside chance for the championship. The club is not any too much class to the Cardinals.

The Cubs have slipped, and the team is not going nearly as well as it was. Chicago has had a hard run and should have improved. The old boys on the team are beginning to feel the heat and it is hurting their pitching staff as they did. Neither are they all pulling together. Chance, it is universally known, is way with veterans as the season works around. A manager must be a Simon Legree to keep the boys going.

Pirates Outsiders.

I don't figure the Pittsburg club to come very strong. Wagner is liable to be in and out of the game, and when Wagner is out, the Pirates are more or less out of the game, usually more. The Brooklyn club is still a mighty good going, and the pitching staff is pressing that of Moran. Both Moran and Wheeler are experts in handling twirlers, and each has shown results. Robinson deserves credit for the way he has been teaching young twirlers some of the tricks of the trade as only he knows them. Brooklyn has a big figure in the finish unless the strain starts to tell on some of the youngsters on the pitching staff, which is not unlikely. Give me a club of veterans when you have to use the lash coming down the stretch.

Behind the weather and everything else there is a stronger reason why better baseball has been played in the big leagues in the last few weeks and why the players look to be hustling harder. It has been demonstrated the unbreakable contract can be bent, and often broken. There are ways to do it. Stallings has suspended a couple of players without pay, and "Joe" Lannin has asked Leonard to forget pay-day until he is in some sort of form. Even the Federal leagues, who fathered the cast iron contract, are turning loose men who had them, and leaving it up to the players to decide whether they are to be broken or not, if the players care to test it.

Russell Ford has been turned loose by Buffalo, and I have heard rumors that Chase won't be long in following, although I don't know how authentic are any rumors in Chase's way. Here what I have called them—just rumors. Tom Seaton has been suspended, and Bresnahan, of the Cleveland club, has been let go. These actions have been a good thing for the game, because they have shown the players they must do some work or they can't be sure of their jobs and their money. The ordinary ball player will hustle anyway, whether he thinks he carries a cast-iron contract or not. But the demonstration that a player is not so sure of his job has shot a hypodermic of energy into some of the lazy ones.

Contracts Hurt.

These baseball contracts will probably work out the same as do those of actors, as I understand it. They are signed up for a certain length of time, or for the run of a show, but if their services are not satisfactory the agreement can be broken on these grounds. The same should go with a ball player.

I don't intend to try to break the contracts of any of my men or to sustain them unnecessarily, but I am in a position to do it if they don't show me all I think they carry. It is true I have been pretty liberal about fines this year when I believe some man wasn't hustling as much as he might.

Always I have believed in fines, as did Frank Chance, and even does mild "Connie" Mack. Chance and Collins quite upset by "taking some of his cash." But George Stallings, for instance, in spite of the fact that he is generally regarded as a hard man, boosts he has never fined a player on his club since he has been in baseball. Therefore under this regime of cast-iron contracts he has been forced to suspend his men without pay when he didn't think they were playing their best.

I believe the change in the situation is going to help the game, because it will make the men hustle hard. The race will remain close over most of the route, with a driving finish down the stretch, but I look to see at least three teams definitely crowded out in the next three weeks during the impending western trip. Paste that prophecy in your hat. I am proud of it.

Ammunition Worth $4,600 Fired by Atlanta Artillery

By J. Walter LeCraw.

Anniston, Ala., July 24.—(Special.)—After four days of firing practice and maneuvers on the government target range here, Battery A, Gate City Guard, Atlanta artillery completed its target work today and returned to quarters at the United States army camp here.

The members of the battery are sore and tired in their camp tonight, but the officers are pleased as they say that much has been accomplished and the standard of efficiency raised much higher as a result of the target work. The four days' firing by the Atlanta artillery has cost the United States government over $2,300 in ammunition alone. The same ammunition, if sold in Europe today, would bring $4,600. The instructing officers, however, are highly satisfied with the work as a whole, and believe that the increased efficiency of the Atlanta battery is well worth the amount expended.

The remaining drills of the Atlanta boys will be held on the grounds of the camp here in Anniston, extensive maneuver work being planned for Monday. The battery will return to Atlanta, according to the present plan, next Tuesday afternoon.

WHITE SOX ARE SLIPPING SLOWLY

Cobb Believes That They Will Soon Be Out of the American League Pennant Hunt.

By TY COBB,
(World's Champion All-Round Baseball Player.)

Unless I am greatly mistaken, much of the punch and pepper has been taken out of the Chicago White Sox. Right now on, I look for the Rowland club to slip gradually out of the fight, leaving the field to Detroit and Boston, which outits promise to battle right down to the littlest grain.

Chicago did not have nearly so successful a stand against the eastern clubs as it had expected and the awful beating that the Red Sox handed Rowland when they took four in five is bound to have its effect. The Sox realized that the Red Sox had added Bowland when they took four in five is bound to have its effect. The Sox realized that the Red Sox had added Bowland back from a phenomenal eastern trip and performed in the game in the Independence day double-header on the 5th.

Boston put the finishing touches on the pitching by going out and engaging the Sox right on their own South Side grounds. It was a bitter blow, and it was the worst experience Rowland has had in fighting two clubs that have it on his staff. Detroit has also demonstrated this by winning ten games in fifteen played. The White Sox might be able to overcome the handicap of their inability to hold us, but they hardly can expect to do it when both Boston and Detroit when both have shown conclusively that they are the masters of the Comiskey people club for club.

Sox Morale Lower.

Of course, the Sox are not lost so much ground and if it should happen that Chicago would win from all its two rivals were slumping, it could easily take another large lead. But the morale effect of the recent beatings is bound to be heavy. Once a club loses confidence in itself it cannot go out and play with the same dash that characterizes the efforts of one entered by the belief that it was unbeatable.

The spectacle of a couple of star pitchers being pulted out encountering either Faber and Scott, of the White Sox, has produced around very liberally by Boston, while Detroit has beaten Faber three times this season.

What proved to me more than anything else that the Sox had "the hockey" was that they tossed off a couple of games of the Boston series by errors in fielding. It is a sure sign that a club is feeling the strain when it begins to foot easy chances. Boston had just as much at stake as Chicago in the series just completed, but you didn't see the Red Sox blowing fly balls all over the lot. They have the old nerve in the pinches and they certainly have the temperament for emergency is greatest.

There is another advantage in that a number of its men have been through the mill of a pennant-winning campaign and know what it means, while nobody on the Chicago club, except Edd Collins and Eudie Murphy, has been on an American League champion. I purposely omit Ed Walsh's name because he has yet to prove conclusively that he is to be depended on.

Then, too, Detroit has players who have fought their way to the top: Crawford, Bush, Stanage, Moriarty, and my self, who with the club have won the the bunting in 1906, and we are better prepared to endure the strain than men who haven't had their baptism of fire in world's series play. This club is one that rises to emergencies well. In fact, Panama Canal and Railroads.

There is an astonishing fact about the Panama canal traffic at the present time, which will throw off. These steamship companies at New York bid for and get tonnage out of cities far beyond the Mississippi river, haul it by rail eastward 2,000 miles to New York, ship it, carry it through the canal and actually send it several hundred miles eastward from the Pacific coast ports. They do it cheaper than the railroads charge to haul it westward across the prairies and over the Rocky Mountains to the same destinations.

FLAG FIELDING NOT AS STRONG

Individual Marks Show a Slump Over Former Years With Only a Few Exceptions.

By Dick Jemison.

The fielding of the F. L. A. G. league for the 1915 season was not up to the average of former years, with one or two exceptions.

Jack Reidy led the outfielders of the league with .993, making but one error in 75 games, and it is a coincidence that, as manager of the Rome club in the Georgia-Alabama league in 1914, Jack had identically the same record. McMillan, of Valdosta, and Stewart and Paschal, of Dothan, were the next best fielders.

Stewart, of Waycross, led the third basemen; Burruss, of Dothan, the shortstops; Jordan, of Brunswick, the second basemen; B. Schwartz, of Valdosta, the first basemen; Jordan, of Brunswick, the catchers, and Baker, of Gainesville, the pitchers.

Here are the figures. Players who participated in less than ten games at any position are not given:

Spaugh, of Gainesville, allowed 108 runs and 205 hits and led the league in being touched freely in these departments.

By Dick Jemison.

Guy Dunning, the speedy little centerfielder of the Gainesville Sharks, is the leading batsman of the F. L. A. G. league for the 1915 season, having a batting average of .316. Medlock, of Valdosta, finished second with .313 and Parks, of Dothan, third with .307.

Dunning also led the batsmen in the number of hits made during the season, making 98 even 100 hits and being the only batsman in the league to reach the century mark. Parks, of Dothan, was second, with 83 hits, and Reidy, of Dothan, third, with 78.

Reidy, of Dothan, was the leading run getter of the league, crossing the platter 69 times. Dunning, of Gainesville, finished second with 48 and Stewart, of Waycross, third with 45 tallies.

In the Social Whirl

By Isma Dooly.

The visit to Atlanta of Mrs. Lucien Cocke, of Roanoke, Va., is giving great pleasure to her countless friends in Georgia. She has visited members of her family in Atlanta, and after a visit to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Howell at their country home in Atlanta, she is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Welborn Hill. Mrs. Howell entertained Mrs. Cocke at luncheon Friday. Mrs. George Traylor entertained for her at luncheon yesterday, and Mr. and Mrs. Chauncey Smith were her hosts at dinner at the Piedmont Driving club last night. Mrs. Cocke has been accompanied by her talented son, Dr. Hugh Hagan, of Roanoke, Va.

Aside from the social incident of Mrs. Cocke's visit, her friends are interested in her literary achievement. Her book, "Bypaths in Dixie," which contained a series of southern dialect stories portraying the most lovable type of the darky mammy in devotion to the white child, is to be followed by another which will tell in a series of short sketches the characteristics of the typical "Georgia Cracker."

The old-time black mammy is passing, and the writers who have drawn stories from her in life have made a contribution to literature which cannot be repeated. The original mammy who tended the baby of plantation days, who taught the little darkies in servants' quarters and who knew intuitively the kind of children's stories to tell is rare. She is too old now to tell the traditions of the past as she liked them, and to hand down the nursery lore, which, for generations, charmed the southern child.

THE GEORGIA CRACKER.

And the Georgia Cracker, whom Mrs. Cocke will picture, is being robbed of his original qualities by the intrusion of progress. He is being forced out of "his ways" by the extension work of the college of agriculture. The government is reaching for him in farm demonstration work and the cotton factory is getting hold of him and bringing him to the small town to work.

Women reformers are trying to abolish the joys of the snuff stick, and now the Smith-Lever bill, with men and women agents for rural betterment and agricultural development in pursuit of the native Georgia Cracker, are trying to get him to build a cow shed as fine as the lean room of the house, and to put up in tin cans the stuff he has formerly luxuriously consigned to the winds.

He can't get peace anywhere any more; he is corrected when he says "we'uns and you'uns," and they are trying to get him to hold his confabs about his neighbor's business in the country schoolhouse instead of on the barrel outside the country store.

Writing the story of these people before they are entirely transformed by the complex agents of civilization affords Mrs. Cocke a theme rich in possibilities. The stories she tells of them are stirring in their interest, and in her inimitable mimicry and charm of expression. When she puts her observations from life into literature, she will have rendered a historic service at the same time.

AN OPEN FIELD.

The many activities which call for publicity, and which draw men and women writers into dealing with cold facts or building up some scheme for betterment, as journalists and magazine contributors, are depriving the present day readers of the romance native Georgia affords. Here lies a field for the leisure woman of talent and ability. She can come forward and render a service to the literary life of her state. She has the time to sit down, study her theme and lift it carefully into literature, when the woman who is the professional writer, or dependent upon what she writes for a living, must meet the demand of the moment, and earn her wage from her presentation and exploitation of the matters of the moment.

In the past the leisure woman of the south prided herself on her literary accomplishment, on the poetry she could write, on her letters, her literary criticisms, and her expression in fiction. There must be this talent today among the gifted women of the south. To them it would seem almost an obligation to put this talent into books that can bear traditional and historic records for all time. They will in no way conflict with the woman wage-earner who sells her wares to the newspaper or the magazine.

In Atlanta there are several leisure women who are distinguished for their ease and fluency as writers, their originality as thinkers and their keen perception of the inspirational subjects coming under the head of "human interest." These women have a wonderful field before them at the present moment, in putting into book form the ante-bellum darkey, with one phase of which Mrs. Cocke has dealt so cleverly, and in the Georgia cracker before he is dragged from the luxury of "not knowin' nothin,'" and of not "havin' pestered none about nothin.'"

Mrs. Edward H. Barnes could make a contribution to literature that would live on, if she would just write the story she tells so charmingly of a certain rural maid who may be called a leading co-citizen in a certain community, where said maid does a prosperous business and who enjoys the friendship of a young society woman of Atlanta. The rural maid has her views on state politics, which she fearlessly and glibly expresses, as she tilts back in her chair, her speech, neither limited in freedom nor expression, by a wad of chewing gum the concentrated contents of one 5 cent package.

The society woman in her French model gown and her own original ideas, draws out the rural sister. They get on the subject of public events and politics and Mrs. Barnes' interpretation of the dialogue furnishes all the matter needed for a book. If she writes it, or one akin to it, the story of Mrs. Wiggs in the "Cabbage Patch" will have its first rival, and Mrs. Barnes will have begun a series of skits that will have perpetual place among southern books.

OFF FOR THE SUMMER.

Mr. and Mrs. Bluett Lee are at present at the Canadian-Pacific hotel, British Columbia. Later they will be at the Fairmont hotel, San Francisco, returning to Chicago in early September. Mr. and Mrs. George McCarty, Jr., are at the Hotel Frontenac, Quebec, and next week they will start through the Canadian lakes. After a visit to the Hot Springs, Va., they spent last week at the Vanderbilt hotel, New York.

Though there is a great deal of wealth in America, it has not yet extended generally to many young men who are good dancing partners. Their fathers are still using the ante-bellum and few young sons even of rich fathers can stand the price of the ultra-fashionable hotel. But there are many nice young men who can look well, dance well, and do the other little things that are a part of ball room equipment, who can make enough being dancing secretaries during the summer to warrant their taking a business course at some college in the fall and winter. Therefore the job of dancing secretary is not to be laughed at. For many reasons it is a practical innovation in the way of summer vocations. For instance, it will save the life of many young hotel officials, who after their day's work in large resort hotels is over, have to go and dance with the colonies of rich daughters who, if they are not danced with in the evening and amused, are apt to leave the hotel.

THE OBLIGATION.

One of the most tragic stories I ever heard of the summer resorts without sufficient male dancers is that Mr. Marion Knowles tells. It was a fashionable southern summer resort where there were the usual number of pretty girls, bad accommodations, screenless windows and flies in the milk and in the butter. In the evening when the dancing began and the girls sat around the walls with their mothers, and there were not enough beaux to go round, a young hotel official would have to come to the rescue. He danced well, he made love well, and he was in every way what the world would call "a nice young man." He was tasked with integrity to that extent that he danced so much and worked so hard all day, he died at the end of the season with nervous prostration while three of the girls, all of whom had been friends, quarreled and never spoke to each other again, because they were all three engaged to him.

People laugh about these things, but they really make up the every-day tragedies of life.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward T. Brown and Miss Brown are still in New York. They will later go to their summer home, Lake Huron.

Mr. and Mrs. William Robinson Brown are expected in Atlanta today as the guest of Mr. Burton Smith at the Georgian Terrace hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles L. Gately will leave in a few days for the east, where they will spend the remainder of the summer.

Mr. and Mrs. John Grant leave next week for the Greenbrier White Sulphur Springs. With them besides their family will be Mrs. William D. Grant and Miss Catherine Ellis.

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Inman will be at Greenbrier White during August.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas B. Paine and their daughter, Douglass, will spend August there. Mr. and Mrs. Harry English will spend part of August at the Virginia resorts.

AN ATTRACTIVE VISITOR.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Andrews have a charming guest in Miss Gene Ashcroft, of Monroe, N. C., who is a student at Columbia university. She was the guest of honor at a beautiful dinner Mr. and Mrs. Andrews gave at the Piedmont Driving club last evening, and a series of parties have been planned for her this week. She will be one of the visiting guests at the Chinese dinner-dance at the Capital City club Wednesday evening.

THE DANCING SECRETARY.

"What is the latest fad you saw in Atlantic City?" I asked a couple who had just returned from there this week. The woman at once described the flesh-colored gowns of kaiser silk, trimmed in fur, and the man, responding to my newspaper interest, added the "dancing secretary."

He then explained that one of the most interesting groups he saw at one of the fashionable hotels was a wealthy woman, her daughter and a very nice looking, well dressed young man, who did social secretary work in the morning and then was the young lady's dancing partner in the evening. What could be more reasonable than such an arrangement? Frequently rich young women with exclusive tastes spend a large amount of money on a summer trousseau; they can afford to go to the most costly hotels, where orchestras playing dance music are installed. In the evening the young woman goes in the ballroom unknown. She sees hundreds of people, but there is no way to meet them, and some people are still unwilling to consign themselves to the tender attentions of social entertainers. Dancing is about the only amusement, and if the young woman has a well put up, well bred, good dancing partner she can at least dance all she pleases.

This is a practical age, and one of conservation. Young men must conserve their energies, and if they perform the function of parasol and golf stick carriers, and go errands for mothers, and then dance with the daughter in the evening, they ought to get well paid, especially if this steady work must go on for a season of many weeks at a resort. Men are said not to be constant by nature and the strain of the season with the same girl would be taxing—therefore, the practicability and justice of a salary.

A PROBABLE PROBLEM.

Those people who are ever borrowing trouble and who will take social problems of all kind seriously will probably apprehend that if a young man is engaged as dancing secretary, looking after the girl and her mother all morning, taking her to the dance pavilion in the afternoon and again in the evening, it may lead to the situation of either party falling in love with the other. Or maybe there might spring up some mutual interest, for somebody has at some time in world history proved the canny idea "that propinquity is a dangerous thing."

But, then, the uplifters can organize "to abolish any cardiac symptoms that may arise between people of the opposite sex related through the agency of the dancing secretary."

Again the employment agency could come to the rescue stipulating in placing young men in positions as dancing secretaries, that the mother employing him must sign an agreement that will assure protection against the daughter's affections.

SCIENCE AND NEAR-SCIENCE UP-TO-DATE

Does a Germ Cause Fatigue? Scientists Say These Pictures Prove It

ARE the tortures of fatigue caused by a germ? Is it possible for science to combat the germ to such an extent as to make man's energy practically limitless?

These are questions that physicians and scientists have been asking since the announcement recently of a theory that fatigue is caused by a germ—a germ whose presence in certain organs is more painful than that of any disease. Efforts now are being made to verify the belief and, if possible, to identify the germ as a first step in finding a means of fighting it.

The possibilities of the situation, say physicians, are almost limitless. But for fatigue a man could continue working forever—he would be an endless source of energy.

The germ theory of fatigue was the result of a chance remark of the coach of an eastern university after a field meet. He was examining snap shots of men who took part in the numerous contests and was attracted by the pain depicted in the faces of those pictured in the strenuous sports.

"No disease could cause the pain shown in those faces," said the man as he studied the distorted countenances.

"No, fatigue is the most painful of diseases when it becomes acute," answered the physician to whom he addressed the remark. "I think it must be a germ that works on the vital organs of a human being when the body is worked to the last notch of endurance. Lowering vitality opens a path for germs of all kinds. Why not the fatigue germ?"

"And if so, why not an antidote for it?" demanded the coach.

Why not? The answer may be found in investigations going on independently in several parts of the country today. Dr. W. K. Watkins, who has become interested in the subject, examined the pictures reproduced herewith and said that they proved the theory, if further proof were lacking.

"Study the faces in these pictures and you will notice that pain is depicted in accordance with the amount of energy being expended," he said. "A man who plays tennis, for instance, does not show anything like the distorted muscles of brow and face as does the shot putter, discus thrower or runner.

"I have studied the faces in snap shots of contestants in numerous sporting contests and have found that in every instance the lines of the face show the amount of energy that has been put forth during the trial of strength. A man may play checkers and reveal only the puckered brow that indicates deep thought, but let him embark on a contest of real strength and you will note the deep furrows in his face and the look of absolute agony that comes when the final spurt of a finish race arrives.

"Can there be any doubt that this pain is caused by a germ? It would seem foolish even to hint at the possible result of a complete identification of the fatigue germ. If we find it of course it will be but a matter of time when a means of successfully combating it will be dicovered.

"And with a means of preventing fatigue what could not man accomplish? There is no broader field for the dreamer."

Meanwhile, the lazy boy who seeks to avoid his share of the chores has found another alibi. He can announce that the fatigue germ is getting in its diabolical work.

Making Clever Manikins From Table Delicacies

THE construction of tiny human figures out of raisins, nuts, plums and fruits to be found on the average dinner table is one of the latest diversions of children and adults in eastern social circles. A nut with sufficiently accommodating crevices may be used as the foundation upon which to insert little wire hairpins. Upon these are strung arms and legs of currants or raisins. A large raisin or appropriately shaped piece of cake may be used for the head.

The man showing in warlike attitude in the picture has been given a savage appearing spear—otherwise a black headed pin from a guest's corsage. The little figures may be made more lifelike according to the ingenuity of the man or woman who undertakes to join his edibles into miniature statuettes.

The Most Peculiar Headdress in the World

THE most remarkable headdress known to man is that of the Zulu chief. It consists of mud, bones, feathers and any other material that the ingenuity or pride of the wearer can dictate. As shown in the accompanying picture, it may rear itself for three feet above the head of its owner—sometimes even higher. The basis for the headdress is a soft clay, which is molded upon the top of the head and into which the articles used for ornamentation are inserted. Sometimes this clay, permitted to dry as hard as brick, remains on the head for weeks or months. Strangely enough, the hair is not killed through this treatment. Many wearers of the strange headdress can boast of much thicker and more abundant hair than the women who make daily visits to beauty shops in the more civilized countries.

Does a Lightning Rod Protect or Menace a Building?

EVEN today really few people understand what occurs when there is a flash of lightning, or the part played by the lightning rod. Some very interesting and valuable information on these matters and on the protective range of lightning rods is given by J. and J. S. B. Larmor in the Proceedings of the Royal Society. Among other things, they say:

"Electric discharge in a gas is a rupture along a line of force, and not over a surface. The initial rupture is to be expected at a place of maximum force, and spreads in both directions along the line of force through that point. In the case of a lightning rod the discharge would start at the summit of the rod, the place of most intense strain, and strike away from the rod. Once a line of disruptive discharge is established the neighborhood of a lightning rod can have little effect, and a simple mathematical investigation shows that a thin isolated rod will draw the discharge hardly at all unless in the region around its summit.

"It is the building carrying the rod which modifies the field and directs discharge to its own upper parts, which, therefore, need protection by conductors adequate to draw off this discharge to earth, and vertical rods, joining together, if need be, lower down, but rising from the corners of the structure to a height which need not exceed about half its breadth, will lift up the field of concentrated electric force from the region directly above the building to the region above their summits, and will so take the discharge. The rods may rise from an earth-connected network spread over the roof, but unless the meshes are fine enough to approximate to a complete metallic covering it is questionable whether it would in itself protect a building from a discharge striking down upon it.

"A spread of connected metallic points some height above the building would appear to be more effective, and might even by themselves suffice to take up and guide away any likely stroke. In fact if we neglect the discharge from the rods into the field their effect is merely to provide the easiest and most probable path for such discharge as may be attracted by the structure.

Dangers That Lurk in the Too Appetizing Dessert

THE desire for dessert seems to be perfectly natural—we like to finish the meal with a sweet of some kind. At the same time this desire may be perverted and unnatural, says Lenna Frances Cooper, a Good Health writer. When, for instance, we have already partaken of a heavy meal the addition of a dessert means additional work that ought not to be placed upon the digestive organs. In other words, a dessert tempts us to eat when we have already had enough, and the dish used in this way may be injurious. This, of course, is not the case if the meal is well planned, so that a place is left for it—so that the dessert becomes a part of the regular meal.

When we come to study desserts adapted particularly to summer purposes we find they ought to be neither excessively sweet nor excessively rich in fats. For fats are conspicuous as heat-producers and their free use will add too many calories to our meal.

To show how this is possible, we need only remember that one ounce of fat produces two and a quarter times as much nutritive value as either the sugars or the nitrogen-containing foods. For this reason it is plain that a small amount of cream or butter in a dessert adds a great many calories to our dietary.

Ideas That May Be Converted Into Cash

ALL about you are inventions or simple household devices that tend to make life easier, happier or healthier. Perhaps you have discovered or invented something of the sort. If not you see articles of this kind that have been originated by others. Perhaps you have seen a new safeguard to cope with umbrella thieves, a means of keeping baby from falling from the high chair, or a holder for hot implements on the cook stove. This newspaper desires to help in distributing these time and labor saving ideas broadcast. It will make your help profitable by buying your two best ideas on these subjects each week. Five dollars will be paid for the best description of such a device and $3 for the second idea selected. If possible a photograph, a drawing or a rough pencil sketch should accompany your contribution. The subjects may involve anything that could be classified as science or near-science. This Wrist Mirror Is for the Motorist

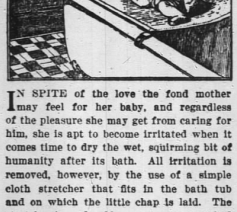
HERE is a simple mirror device by which motorists may see what is going on behind them. The principle of the mirror attached to the wrist has been patented by George W. Mosher, Chicago, Ill. It is much more convenient than the stationary mirror fixed to the wind shield, as it may be moved about at any angle. By simply glacing at his wrist the automobile driver can see at once whether a street car or a faster vehicle is coming up behind him.

A New Bath Device For Baby



IN SPITE of the love the fond mother may feel for her baby, and regardless of the pleasure she may get from caring for him, she is apt to become irritated when it comes time to dry the wet, squirming bit of humanity after its bath. All irritation is removed, however, by the use of a simple cloth stretcher that fits in the bath tub and on which the little chap is laid. The stretcher is made of heavy canvas, stretched between two poles. The poles are equipped at each end with hooks that engage the rim of the tub. Laid out on this device, baby may squirm to his heart's content without causing trouble, and there is no annoyance from the fact that he is soapy and wet, since his mother need not hold him on her lap.

Does Long Life Belong to Weak Instead of Strong?

DR. SEYMOUR TAYLOR, a well-known English physician, says it is by no means his experience that the largest and apparently strongest men live longest. Life insurance records show that those with small, bony frames and weak muscles survive longer than their more robust contemporaries. Wesley's factors conducive to longevity were faculty for sleep, care in not losing a single night's sleep, and an even temper. But, above all these, Dr. Taylor places the influence of inheritance.

"The longest livers," he says, "other things being equal, are the offspring of parents who lived to a very great old age, and if this tenacity of life has existed for two or, better still, for three previous generations then a man or woman with such an ancestry may also be expected to attain very old age."

Too Much Food.

With some of Dr. Taylor's recommendations many people may not agree, but one thing, he says, is clear to all physicians of experience, and that is that overeating is a potent cause of disease and premature death.

"I remember," says Dr. Taylor, "the remark of a wealthy old gentleman who lived to 96, who said that he always made it a rule to leave the table feeling that he could have eaten more than he had done. There was wisdom in his dictum. * * * If you wish to keep your horse in health and condition you order him so many feeds of corn a day and no more, though probably he could eat twice as much. Let us apply this to ourselves. Too much food can only be tolerated with safety by regular and fairly vigorous muscular exercise. This cannot, as a rule, be obtained by the town dweller."

Though he preaches moderation in eating, Dr. Taylor does not advise a starvation dietary. On the contrary, he says, it is well known to him that those people best recover from a serious illness who have enjoyed a generous dietary short of excess.

Dr. Taylor favors the pipe in moderation, but condemns the cigaret. He states on the authority of an oculist of high repute that cigaret smoking is a fertile source of tobacco blindness. The habit of inhalation he characterizes as "distinctly injurious." Coffee, Dr. Taylor thinks, should be taken at breakfast only, or in small quantities after the last meal of the day, so as not to interfere with sleep. Tea, he asserts, is not harmful if properly infused and consumed only in moderate amount.

"On the contrary," he continues, "I know nothing more sustaining as a drink, even for the manual laborer, than a cup of good tea with some milk added. Tea has been accused of causing indigestion. No such blame is due in the vast majority of cases, though here and again there may be some individuals whose peculiarities or idiosyncrasies will not allow them to drink the beverage. Besides the sustaining power of tea during muscular exercise, it is also a nerve stimulant, and a good one, too."

It is the tea meal, we are assured, that is injurious. But the pure leaf is not at fault.

Value of a Well-Secured Policy.

While referring to the subject of mental worry, Dr. Taylor states that he knows nothing which is more calculated to maintain health, both of mind and body, than a sufficient policy in a sound life insurance office. "Many a man has his life shortened by the knowledge that his dependents are inadequately provided for in case he should die. But a well-secured policy allows one to sleep at nights, and so health and life are preserved and prolonged." Middle-aged women Dr. Taylor warns against worrying over troubles or magnifying small troubles. Special allusion is made to the domestic servant problem, and he advises women who may have servants to overlook little mistakes on the servants' part instead of worrying about them. "Many a woman needlessly frets herself into an illness, or a nervous breakdown, because some servant is not quite according to pattern."

A SIMPLE newspaper holder can be made by cutting away a portion of one side of an ordinary clothespin, drilling a hole through the thick end for a screw or nail, and fastening it in place where desired. Another way is to split off one side of a clothespin and cut the bottom of the remaining part, tapering as shown; then drill a hole to avoid splitting the piece and fasten in a convenient place.

Japs Learned About Fans From Chinese

THOUGH the Japanese have the reputation of making the fan popular, they adopted the fashion from the Chinese. Chinese women are rarely seen without a fan in their hands, attached to the side or tucked away in a skirt pocket.

Nearly every dress worn by a Chinese woman is trimmed with a long silken cord that is fastened around her waist. On this cord she often has a fan, a small parasol, snuff boxes, tobacco pouches, spectacle case and a tiny purse. Whatever else is not there the fan is sure to occupy an important place. The women of means have beautiful silk fans, hand painted and set with mother of pearl or golden sticks. These are usually incased in beautifully decorated cases, which they attach to their girdles. The woman of small means contents herself by placing her more modest fan between the collar of her coat and the back of the neck. When these women are not fanning themselves they are using this feminine weapon to keep off the sun as one would use a parasol. The schoolmaster uses his fan to rap the knuckles of his pupils by way of punishment.

FOR POWERFUL NAVY AND ADEQUATE ARMY WILSON IS WORKING

Announcement That President Has Called for Reports on National Defense Causes Widespread Comment.

PRESIDENT IS PLANNING FOR PERMANENT POLICY

Indicated in Official Quarters That Plans Are to Be Expedited Because of Possibilities of International Situation.

Washington, July 24.—Announcement from the white house today that President Wilson had directed Secretaries Garrison and Daniels to report to him a program of national defense caused widespread comment.

Several weeks ago the president discussed the question with his cabinet with the result that both departments began preparation of plans to meet any emergency and also to establish a permanent policy for adequate national defense.

No Reason for Announcement.

The white house statement gave no reason for the announcement, stating merely that the president would confer on his return from Cornish, N. H., with Secretaries Daniels and Garrison "to formulate a sane, reasonable and practical program of national defense."

It was indicated, however, in official quarters that the determination to expedite the plans being made resulted from a consideration of the possibilities of the international situation.

"The president has been considering every phase of the matter of national defense and intends immediately on his return to Washington to confer with the secretary of war and the secretary of the navy, his purpose being to procure information on which he can formulate a sane, reasonable and practical program of national defense."

Possibility of Extra Session.

The president, in letters to Secretaries Garrison and Daniels early last week calling for the reports made no reference to any particular situation, but emphasized the importance of the entire subject of national defense. He wishes to make the navy as efficient as any in the world, to see the regular army adequately developed and equipped and the citizenry trained to arms in a way consistent with American traditions.

For several weeks Secretary Garrison has been in conference with members of the general staff shaping plans for presentation to the president. The general board of the navy abandoned its usual summer trip to Newport and is preparing its recommendations for Secretary Daniels. The president wishes to have the information ready when he returns, and the indications are that the influence of the administration will be exerted to secure adequate appropriations.

Mr. Wilson has not indicated whether he will call congress into special session. This depends largely on developments in the international situation. The dispatch from Germany of what is generally regarded as the strongest note yet written to any of the European belligerents has accentuated the possibility of a special session in event American rights again are violated by German submarine commanders.

Millions for Preparedness.

Among army and navy officers familiar with the latest developments the belief prevails that a military budget practically double that of last year will be presented to congress. The army, it is believed, will seek at least $200,000,000, and the navy perhaps as high as $250,000,000.

War department plans look toward the development of a large reserve army with a minimum, it is said, of 500,000 men and with adequate provision for the use of the militia and men who have previously served in the regular army. Weekly meetings are being held by the board designated by Secretary Garrison to prepare plans for a general reorganization of the army. Special attention is being given, it is understood, to planning for an adequate supply of munitions.

The navy department, it has been indicated, will ask for at least thirty and probably fifty submarines. The general board's recommendations are also expected to include a number of battle cruisers, a minimum of four dreadnaughts and a proportionate number of scout cruisers and auxiliary craft such as fuel ships and submarine tenders. The department is engaged with experiments with aeroplanes and submarines, and also with attempts to find a practical means of defense for battleships against torpedoes. The experts are said to be spending $100,000 in an effort to solve this problem.

AMERICAN BULLETS TO STOP MEXICANS

If They Fight on Border and Fire Into U. S. Territory—General Funston Is Ordered to Use Force.

Washington, July 24.—Orders were issued today with the approval of President Wilson to Major General Funston to repel with force if necessary any firing into American territory during fighting between the Mexican factions in border towns, and a note was dispatched to General Carranza advising him of that fact.

Soon afterward advices from Vera Cruz to the Carranza headquarters here said the general had instructed General Calles, his commander before Nogales, not to attack the Villa forces there, and gave assurances that the Carranza forces, which have occupied Naco, would withdraw, leaving a civil administration in charge. The garrison marched out late today.

What threatened a new complication in the Mexican situation apparently passed over with officials here determined to take drastic action if the Mexicans force the fighting. The specific method of repelling any possible attack was not mentioned in the note to Carranza, but the inference was that American artillery would, if necessary, in such situation construed as an attack on American citizens.

Carranza Heeded Warning.

Specific instructions to General Funston were not issued, however as tacks immediately without referring the question further to Washington.

General Carranza apparently gave immediate heed to the warning. A dispatch received from him by his agency here late today stated he had instructed his troops to discontinue their march on Nogales.

The state department has had the border situation under consideration for several days. The Villa and Carranza agencies here have each held the other responsible for the violation of the agreement to neutralize border towns, made when General Hugh Scott, chief of staff of the army, first visited Naco. Without engaging in any controversy the American government has insisted that the status quo be maintained and no fighting attempted which would endanger those on the American side of the boundary.

Situation Discouraging.

The situation throughout Mexico as reported from various sections today was considered discouraging by officials.

General Pablo Gonzales, the Carranza commander, is in the vicinity of Pachuca, endeavoring to retake the town from the Zapata forces. General Obregon, another Carranza leader, according to official reports, is isolated north of Mexico City. A flying column of Villa troops has taken Queretaro and is operating in the vicinity of the Mexican capital.

With the main forces away from their bases and moving away from destroyed railroads, news of the military situation is meagre. In Las Mochis, state of Sinaloa, 1,500 Mayo Indians are causing much apprehension, and General Carranza, who has forces nearby, has been asked to assist in protecting foreigners and their property.

PEACE CONFERENCE, DESPITE CARRANZA.

El Paso, July 24.—General Carranza's military officers are to be invited to a peace conference regardless of the "uncompromising attitude" of their chief, according to Miguel Diaz Lombardo, Villa's minister of foreign affairs, who arrived today from Washington. Lombardo is en route to Mexico to confer with General Villa who he says, undoubtedly will agree to the plan.

Mr. Lombardo was accompanied by Manuel Bonilla, minister of communications in the cabinet of President Madero. General Felipe Angeles, Villa's second in command, is expected from Washington within a day or two.

Efforts to end the war will be based on the assumption, according to Mr. Lombardo, that it is useless to deal with Carranza.

"He has eliminated himself by refusing to discuss peace." Mr. Lombardo said.

Mr. Lombardo said he has received intimations that the more important followers of Carranza would be willing to discuss peace regardless of the chief's attitude.

EXAMINE ALL COOKS AND HOTEL WAITERS RECORDER TO URGE

With the view of securing the passage of an ordinance by city council to require all cooks and waiters in hotels and restaurants in Atlanta to pass physical examinations by regularly physicians to certify that they are not victims of venereal diseases or of other constitutional diseases that might be transferred to others by the handling of foodstuffs, Judge George E. Johnson, of the recorder's court of Atlanta, has written a letter to Councilman Claude Ashley urging that he introduce such an ordinance in council.

The letter is the outcome of a trial in police court Saturday afternoon of a negro cook in a local restaurant. The cook was charged with the rape of a 9-year-old negro girl. Judge Johnson forced the negro to undergo an examination, in which it was learned that he was suffering from a venereal disease. The negro cook was committed to the Fulton county Tower on the charge of rape, and held without bond.

"This case has brought up a serious question that involves the health and happiness of thousands of Atlantans," said Judge Johnson to a reporter for The Constitution last night. "I have written a letter to Councilman Ashley, asking him to introduce an ordinance in council requiring every cook and waiter in hotels and restaurants to undergo examinations to determine if they have such diseases. If they have they should not be allowed to handle foodstuffs eaten by the public.

Judge Johnson announced last night that he would use his influence to secure the passage of the ordinance he proposes to Councilman Ashley.

Since writing the letter he is in favor of extending the scope of the ordinance to include everyone who handles foodstuffs to any extent.

NEGRO JOY RIDER BREAKS HIS NECK IN A STOLEN AUTO

Louisville, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—Will Rock, a negro, today at Wadley, stole an automobile, which he was left in charge, and had a wreck that resulted in breaking his own neck. W. J. Clarke, a resident of Louisville, drove to Wadley to witness a ball game between Wadley and an Indian team. He left his car with Rock and paid him to take care of it. Later Mr. Clarke started to his car, but found it was gone with the negro driver towards Bartow.

Inquiry developed that Rock had hit a sand bar while going at a rapid rate, the car skidded and hit a telephone post, and turning over, broke the negro's neck. Rock had persuaded another negro to go with him on his runaway, but in the wreck the second negro was not injured. He was captured, however, and put in jail.

SOUTH IS AROUSED OVER COTTON BAN, SAYS J. J. BROWN

Douglas, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—J. J. Brown, president of the Georgia Farmers' union, has been speaking to multitudes during the last thirty days, from Tennessee to the Florida line. Farmers are joining the union in large numbers, bankers and merchants have a better understanding with the union, and are co-operating cordially with it. President Brown says that Georgia has harvested splendid crops of wheat and oats, and that the yield in corn will be the largest in the history of the state. The cotton crop, owing to reduced acreage, will be smaller than for the past decade.

England's embargo on cotton is producing agitation and intense dissatisfaction, and unless speedily removed President Brown predicts a stormy uprising among the people of the south.

GERMANY FIXES PRICES FOR NECESSARIES OF LIFE

Severe Punishment for Those Who Unduly Increase Prices of Food.

Berlin, July 24.—(By Wireless to Sayville.)—The federal council has issued its long expected order regulating prices for necessaries of life, especially grain and fodder. The order provides that severe punishment shall be dealt dealers who unduly increase prices or withhold articles of food for the purpose of artificially raising prices.

The German empire is divided into four districts instead of thirty-two departments, where prices vary, according to the special local conditions.

Corn prices remain at about the same figures as heretofore. The price of rye is fixed at 220 marks ($55) per ton for the Berlin district; at 215 marks ($53.75) for the eastern district, and 230 marks ($57.50) for the western district.

The price of wheat is fixed at 40 marks ($10) above that of rye, and beginning with a certain date the regulations provide for a bi-weekly increase of 1 1-2 marks (37 cents) per ton.

Barley, to be used as fodder, and oats are fixed at the uniform price per ton throughout the empire. These prices remain below the average of last year's figures. The regulations also provide for the creation of an imperial fodder board whose duty shall be to supply all classes of cattle, swine and fowl raisers with oats, barley and molasses substitutes.

Otis F. Mills Dead.

Greenville, S. C., July 24.—Otis F. Mills, president of the Mills Cotton Manufacturing company, of this city, died suddenly at his summer home at Cedar Mountain, N. C., according to word received here today. He was 75 years old. He was a confederate veteran.

DEMANDS OF STRIKERS REFUSED AT BAYONNE

New York, July 24.—Efforts to settle the strike of 1,500 Bayonne oil workers, which has been in progress for a week and has been marked by serious riots and the killing of three strikers, failed tonight, when the Standard Oil company of New Jersey notified the men that it would not accede to their modified demands. The strikers then voted not to return to work on Monday. Nearly 6,000 more men from the Tidewater company's plant, thrown out of work by the strike, also will remain idle.

In their demands the strikers expressed their willingness to accept a 15 per cent increase in wages with a 54-hour week or to return to work Monday, leaving the several points in dispute to be decided by a board of arbitration that would later be appointed.

The only disorder of the day occurred late today when a crowd of 400 men attacked Max Leitzer, a retired United States army soldier, mistaking him for a guard.

The proposals of the strikers were refused because the company officials claimed they did not represent all employees.

John A. Moffett, one of the two federal mediators, was handed a copy of the company's answer. The two mediators had brought the strikers' committee in touch with the Standard people. However, Mr. Moffett said he did not feel discouraged.

"I do not feel that we will yet succeed in reaching an amicable understanding," he added.

TORPEDO TEARS HOLE IN TURKISH CRUISER

London, July 25.—(1:58 a. m.)—Advices received in Athens from Constantinople state that the Turkish cruiser Midullu, formerly the German cruiser Breslau, was torpedoed in the Black sea and has returned with a hole six yards long and three yards wide under the water line, according to the Athens correspondent of Reuter's Telegram company. The correspondent adds that the German submarine U-21 is reported to be stranded off Tchekmedje.

RESCUES COMPANIONS FROM DEATH IN RIVER

Detective John Black Is Now Being Praised for His Skill as Swimmer.

Detective John Black is being given warm praise at police station, for the report reached Atlanta Saturday of his heroic act in saving the lives of T. D. Shaw and Nick Phillips when they came near drowning Friday in the White River near Alverton, Ga. Shaw is a patrolman.

When seen at police headquarters Detective Black modestly admitted saving the lives of his companions. He said they were on a fishing excursion on the White river and that while attempting to swim the river Shaw and Phillips became exhausted. He swam to their rescue and saved them as they were sinking the second time.

GERMAN IS ARRESTED FOR EXPLOSION PLOT

Cleveland, Ohio, July 24.—A young German, 25 years old, whose name the authorities refused to divulge, was arrested tonight on a charge of complicity in connection with an alleged plot to blow up the plants of the American Steel and Wire company, the Peerless Motor Car company and the White company.

His arrest followed an investigation by federal and local authorities. Two of the man's fellow employees charge that he told them of an elaborate plan to blow up the plants.

He denied tonight that he has any knowledge of explosives, and declared he had said merely that "if it could be done without killing anyone the war would be stopped."

Three-Run Lead Tossed Away — Chestnutt Chases 3 Crackers and 1 Chick. Andreen's Homer Wins.

DETAIL TODAY'S GAME.
Today's game between the Crackers and the Chicks, starting at 3:30 o'clock, will be called in detail by Dick Jemison at his baseball parlors, on Viaduct place.

By Herbert Caldwell.

Memphis, Tenn., July 24.—(Special.) Michael Andreen took in his hands his bat and penned the climax to a thrilling diamond sketch at Russwood park this afternoon, woven around Andreen, the hero; Umpire Scotty Chestnutt, the villain, and a 4 to 3 victory for the Memphis ball team over the Atlanta ball team.

Andreen was wished into the affair by Umpire Chestnutt, and it afterwards proved a wishing of a victory on Memphis. With the score standing 3 to 3, Jimmy Keeley, the Chicks' pitcher, went to bat first in the ninth inning. Jimmy disagreed with "His Umpa Chesty" on a called strike. Jimmy expressed his opinion and was ordered out of the game.

Michael Andreen, who had covered a portion of the bench during the afternoon, was sent in to bat for the exiled Keeley. Michael set himself and Pitcher Virgil Day heaved the first ball. There was a terrific crash and the ball sizzled through the air on a line to Left Fielder Lee. Lee made a desperate chase for the ball, but turned in time to see it land on the ground and then clear the railing of the left field bleachers. Michael doggedly trotted after passing first base and scored the winning run of a game which fairly bulged with exciting incidents.

Three Crackers Chased.

Part of the Atlanta team, the active participants witnessed the climax. In the eighth inning Umpire Chestnutt came near clearing the park of Crackers as the result of a dispute and argument which arose over a decision at the plate which gave the Chicks the tying tally.

Otto Williams was the first to be ordered out by Chestnutt. Joe Jenkins, the Cracker catcher, took up the debate and was escorted out. Bill Smith, the Cracker manager, joined in the argument, and the last seen of Manager Billy he was being led around the corner of the grand stand by a blue-coated brass-buttoned gentleman.

Atlanta won the game in the first inning. The Crackers made a gift of the game to the Chicks in the eighth and then became all peeved at themselves for their generosity.

The Crackers tried their best to rid themselves of the victory in the eventful eighth, but the Chicks were reluctant in accepting the offering, and as it was the game was only tied. Carl Thompson, who had been growing wild with the start of the seventh inning, walked Pete Allison to start the eighth for Memphis. Scotty Perry was then called in to relieve Thompson. Perry walked Crothers and Stewart in succession, and turned the job over to Virgil Day with the bases concerded.

Virgil immediately set out to clear the bases and scored Allison on a wild pitch, all other Chick runners making a notch. Day then purposely walked Manager Lord. Schiel hit a fly to Williams, and Cruthers was snuffed out at the plate. Eibel sent another grounder to Williams, and Lord scored on the attempt to head him at the plate.

Where Argument Came.

It was a close play and Umpire Chestnutt ruled that Seward allied the line when Catcher Jenkins juggled the ball. This brought about the argument which resulted in the calling of three Cracker players. Day then struck Baldwin out and Mitchell performed on a weak lift to Lee in left field.

The Crackers scored three runs, which should have been sufficient for victory, in the initial inning when they had too much trouble in solving Keeley's damp delivery. McDonald opened with a single to left and went to second on Williams' sacrifice. Lee hit a fly to right which the wind forced Stewart to make a desperate run for. Stewart got under the ball and dropped it. McDonald scored and Lee went to second. Moran drove a screaming liner for three sacks and Lee scored. Manning struck out, but Kauffman followed with a liner to left, counting Moran. Kauffman then stole second, but remained there while Jenkins sled out to Allison in center.

The Chicks hit Thompson rather freely, but were unable to stick in the punch at the needed moment until the sixth. Two fast double plays, one in the first by McDonald, Williams and Kauffman, and one in the fourth by Williams and Kauffman, spoiled probable Chick scores. In the third the locals got three hits off Thompson without scoring. Baldwin went out at the plate in this round trying to count from second on Cruthers' single to Moran.

First Chick Score.

The homelings scored their first run in the sixth when it looked like they were going to score more. Cruthers singled for an opening. Stewart was out, but Cruthers advanced to second on Lord's out at first. Schiel batted for Keeley man. Schiel planted one on left field hill, scoring Cruthers.

The Chick catcher, who is not wearing any medals for speed records, tried to beat the hit into a base hit and was out on a relay Lee to Risland to McDonald. The Crackers got one hit off Keeley in the last four innings, and did not even threaten to score.

The Chicks were in the fast served, but their portion was big enough for a victory. When Williams came Jenkins were put out of the game Pitcher Keeley went to right field in the place of Manning and Manning took Williams' place at second. Neither had a chance after the shift.

Playing Best Baseball of His Long Career

OTTO WILLIAMS.

The veteran infielder who is playing second base for the Crackers this season, and swing them as good a brand of second-basing as they have ever had. This is some tribute to the hard-working veteran, when it is remembered how many good second-sackers the Crackers have had. Williams leads all the second basemen in fielding by over thirty points, and, while not hitting much, his hits have been most timely. His pep has been a big factor in starting the Crackers to the front, and his work as a means of steadying the infield and getting it to playing good baseball after so long a lapse. There is not a fan in Atlanta who is not strong for the hard-working veteran.

CHICK EVANS AGAIN WESTERN CHAMPION

Defeats J. D. Standish, Jr., in Finals and Breaks Course Record in Doing So.

Cleveland, Ohio, July 24.—Chick Evans today defeated J. D. Standish, Jr., Detroit, 7 and 5, in the final match for the 1915 western amateur title. He set a new record for the course this morning, finishing the eighteen holes in 71.

Standish was handicapped by his weakness to slice or hook on his tee shot. His recovery from sand traps and long grass was admirable. Evans played an even game throughout.

Mr. Evans' card in establishing the course record is given below: He made the last nine holes in 34, two strokes under par. His score for the first nine, 37, equalled par.

Y. M. C. A. AQUATIC MEET SUCCESSFUL

One-Hundred-Yard Record Is Broken by Two Swimmers. Tub Race Amuses.

Saturday night, in the big swimming pool at the Young Men's Christian association was held the monthly aquatic meet in the young men's division. The six events were interesting and proved the ability of the contestants. The outstanding feature of the evening's performances was the breaking of the association record of the 100-yard swim at 1:16 4-5, held by Walter Dubard. Bonnell and Hartney both broke the record, the former with 1:12 1-5 and the latter with 1:13 1-5.

The tub race furnished much amusement to both the contestants and the spectators. Each contestant is allowed two minutes in which to cover the length of the pool while sitting in a tub, paddling with the hands, and many were the duckings which the voyagers received before getting under way.

40-Yard Back Stroke—Mr. Bonnell first, with 33 seconds; S. I. Hartney, second, with 34 2-5 seconds, and J. Tyner third, with 44 3-5 seconds.

100-Yard Swim—George Bonnell first, with 1:12 1-5; S. I. Hartney second, with 1:13 1-5; G. D. Dunn third, with 1:25.

Tub Race—L. L. Schelnert first, with 1:12; G. D. Dunn second, with 1:46.

Plunge for Distance—George Bonnell first, with 40 feet; S. I. Hartney, second, 38.6; W. H. Lee third, 29.6.

20-Yard Back Stroke—G. D. Dunn and S. I. Hartney tied for first and second, 10 4-5 seconds; George Bonnell third, 11 seconds.

Running Broad Dive—L. L. Schelnert first, 17 feet 6 inches; S. I. Hartney second, 16 feet 6 inches; G. D. Dunn and George Bonnell tied for third with 16 feet.

Yesterday morning the second series of the championship games for the Summer league in the school B division was won by the B 1 boys, they winning all events, a total of 36 points, to B 2's 8 points. On Thursday the first games were played and B 2 walked away in easy style, but B 1 showed that they could come back. The deciding game will be played tomorrow morning. The score to date is: B 1, 49; B 2, 45. The events Monday morning will be a brick relay, volley ball game, plunge for distance and a 15-yard swim relay.

Macon, Ga., July 24.—Until the eighth inning today's game between Columbus and Macon for the South Atlantic league championship was close and hard fought. FRANCIS OUIMET BAY STATE CHAMP FOR THIRD TIME

Newton, Mass., July 24.—Francis Ouimet won the Massachusetts amateur golf championship today for the third time when he defeated W. H. Chick, of Brae burn, former intercollegiate champion, 8 and 3. Ouimet's medal score was 76 in the first round and about 78 in the second.

Carrollton 16, Roswell 5.

Carrollton, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—Carrollton took the third game, winning the series from Roswell today when the visitors' crack ball team broke the high altitude record, ascending in the air continuously until the game was called at the end of the seventh inning on account of the exhaustion of the Carrollton base runners and the ennui of the spectators. Stevens, for Carrollton, apeared as a pinch hitter with a policeman's club and got his first bit of the season. Head, for Carrollton, pitched a good game. Carrollton hits, 17, errors 3, runs 16. Roswell hits 7, errors 4, runs 5.

Batteries—Head and Hutchens; M. Rucker Wingo, T. Rucker and Rucker and Strickling.

Little Bob Jones Wins Birmingham Invitation Meet

Birmingham, Ala., July 24.—(Special.) Robert T. Jones, Jr., Atlanta's 13-year-old golfing sensation, showed real golfing temperament and grit here today when he won the finals in the Roebuck Golf and Auto club's invitation tournament from William Badham, of Birmingham, 1 up, 21 holes.

It was a gruelling match for both contestants. Badham's driving and putting excelled the Atlanta youngster, but the latter discounted any superiority in these departments by his iron play and his mashie pitches to the greens.

It was the wonderful approaching of the Atlanta youngster that earned him the victory, time after time laying long mashie approach shots almost dead to the hole, thereby regaining any advantage his opponent had secured off the tee.

Semi-Final Results.

In the semi-finals, played Saturday morning, young Jones eliminated Scott Probasco, of Chattanooga, 4 up and 2 to play, while Badham won from R. P. Jones, of Atlanta, the youngster's father, 2 up and 1 to play.

One of the largest galleries that has ever turned out to a golf match in Birmingham witnessed the struggle, and, though playing against a local man, the sympathies of the majority were with the Atlanta youngster, especially after several exhibitions of nerve in making recoveries on holes where he seemed hopelessly beaten.

Veteran golfers who witnessed the youngster's play through the local tournament predict a brilliant future, and with a little more experience he is looked upon to give any golfer in the south a close run.

Match by Holes.

The drives of both Badham and Jones were over 200 yards and in the center of the course. However, on the green Jones made a perfect stymie on Badham, which cost him the hole. The gallery applauded the work of the youngster.

Both had excellent drives in the second hole, which was halved in five. The third hole was also halved, but in the fourth Jones again took the advantage when Badham drove in the rough. Jones won the hole, 4 to 5.

Badham recovered in the fifth hole, when Jones was bunkered on his drive, and the sixth hole was halved. Both players were cool and secured beautiful drives on the seventh hole, which was halved. Badham made it all even by winning the eighth hole on a 220-yard drive and some excellent putting.

At the Turn.

At the ninth hole Badham made his first mistake and consequently lost the hole to young Jones, who, with an iron nerve, was making splendid recoveries on all bad lies and was playing his opponent off his feet. The tabulated score showed that Jones had gone out in 46 and Badham in 47. Jones was one up at the turn.

Coming in, both players settled down and some excellent golf was the result.

The tenth hole, despite a high and short drive by Badham, was halved. Par golf was played at the eleventh hole, which was also halved.

The twelfth hole was also halved on two perfect drives by Jones and Badham, but Badham's putting had allowed Jones to have the hole.

Badham drove 300 yards in the thirteenth hole, but the hole was lost to Jones, who, despite a bad drive, made an excellent recovery and holed out on a 10-foot putt. Jones was now 2 up and the favorite to win, although the friends of Badham never gave up.

Badham recovered in the fourteenth hole, and Jones went over the green on some sensational puttins on the green. The fifteenth hole was halved and Badham made it all even by winning the sixteenth hole. By this time great excitement prevailed in the gallery, but players seemingly were cool and collected and both smilingly encouraged each other on excellent drives.

Jones won the seventeenth hole and came down the home of the galleries but, Badham, undaunted, braced, and by two splendid drives won the difficult eighteenth hole, which was also bunkered.

The players came in with the following score: Jones 45, Badham 46. Totals for the 18 holes, Jones 91, Badham 87.

Extra Holes.

Badham started off badly at the nineteenth hole, and it was feared that the match was lost, but the plucky little player, with dogged courage, played safe and landed on the green in three, and by holing a 10-foot putt, halved the hole with Jones, who missed a short putt.

Badham really lost the match in the seventieth hole when his ball struck the cup, but bounded out, forcing the halving of the hole. It was a costly shot.

On the twenty-first hole Badham drove off his ball and was bunkered before the green, while young Jones made a clean drive to the green. Badham made a beautiful recovery, two short putts Jones holed out, winning his first tournament.

Work For the Unemployed Attracts National Notice

As secretary of the Atlanta Clearing House of Unemployed, Miss Susan McClellan has received an invitation from the United States bureau of labor, Washington, D. C., to go as an official delegate to the conference to be held in San Francisco between representatives of the United States bureau of labor and representatives of state and municipal labor bureaus.

Although the Atlanta Clearing House for the Unemployed has neither municipal nor state affiliation, nor has it aid from the municipality or state, the work accomplished by it has attracted national notice, and the participation of the Atlanta body is asked at the San Francisco conference.

When asked about the movement and the probability of Miss McClellan's attendance upon the conference, Mrs. Beaumont Davison, president of the board of management of the Atlanta clearing house, explained that the work of the agency had grown to that extent that the United States labor bureau had recorded its usefulness.

"Miss McClellan was invited to the recent convention of employment bureaus in Detroit, Mich., and went to bear our message. She told the story of our beginning, which was the emergency work we did for the unemployed the past winter, and presented her report as she does to us each month. It attracted the attention of Mr. Post, the assistant secretary of labor, from whom Miss McClellan received much encouragement and the information that our work was along the line being urged by the government for the unemployed.

"Miss McClellan's message which she brought back to us was full of information and inspiration, which encourages us to go on with the work, and to hope in time to broaden its scope."

The Atlanta Clearing House for the Unemployed is supported through the public spiritedness of one citizen, under a board of management including Mrs. Davison, Mrs. P. J. McGovern, Mrs. Robert Wessells, Mrs. Robert Grant, Mrs. William H. Kiser. Miss Susie McClellan, the secretary, is studying the problem of the unemployed as she meets it in her office each day. At first the agency confined its interest to women, but so numerous were the applications from men the bureau is now undertaking to take up that responsibility. Miss McClellan is in close touch with Georgia's labor commission, as she believes that the public employment bureau destined to do the most far-reaching work should be a part of the state department of labor.

Indirect Lighting at Exposition

(From The World's Work.)

Walk as you will through courts or corridors or beside lagoons at the Panama-Pacific exposition at San Francisco, you will not once see a direct source of light—and yet you will see your way and the buildings with delight and ease. If you wish to realize more fully what a revolution has here been wrought in illumination, you have only to walk over to the Joy Zone and see lights as they were used at former expositions—strings of incandescent lamps festooned across the highways and outlining the corners of buildings, garish, harsh and blinding. A popular expression of the contrast is a remark you will often hear from visitors: "The most profitable concession at St. Louis was for the sale of smoked glasses; you can't find a pair on the grounds at San Francisco."

Stripling's Wee Daughter Makes Governor Promise To Pardon Her Daddy

Harris Tells Girl That He Will Free the Famous Prisoner, But Does Not Set Date.

Milledgeville, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)

A wee girl's plea today won freedom for her daddy, when Bessie, 6-year-old daughter of Edgar Stripling, Georgia's most notable life-term prisoner, won from Governor Nat Harris the promise that he will pardon her father.

The child has been here for several days waiting for the governor to arrive, that she might make her plea for him "to turn her papa loose."

This evening as the governor Harris went to the prison, the child, whose name is Bessie, walked up to him and, taking his hand, said:

Harris Moved by Plea.

"Mr. Governor, won't you please turn my papa loose? He is sick and there is nobody to work for us at home. Please turn him loose, Mr. Governor."

The governor, visibly affected by the childish plea, patted little Bessie on the head as he replied:

"Little girl, run and tell your pape that I'm going to turn him out of here, but I don't know just what day. Tell him I'm going to pardon him."

Bessie ran with the good news as fast as her little legs could carry her to her father, who was on the same floor of the prison. Stripling was overcome with joy. He declared that if the pardon didn't come in all months, however, that he would be dead.

"I'm a physical and nervous wreck," he said. "I'll be dead if I don't get out of here very soon."

Stripling Greets Governor.

Later Governor Harris went in to see Stripling. The prisoner, when the governor called his name, said:

"I greet you, Mr. Governor, as the Christian gentleman I know you are. I know you're my friend. May God crown your administration with glory."

Stripling's emotions overcame him then and he broke down and wept.

Little Bessie Stripling, with her brown sister, Miss Ruth, has been living near the prison for some time and visiting her father at every opportunity. Mrs. Stripling, the wife, with six other children, lives at Columbus, Ga. She has been in poor health and near destitution since her husband was returned to the Georgia prison.

Started Life Anew.

Stripling was sentenced to the Georgia state prison in 1897 for the murder of William Cornett in Harris county. In 1909 he escaped and went to Danville, Va., where he hid his identity, taking the name of R. E. Morris, and became one of the leading citizens of the town. He was joined there by his wife and children and the family lived happily, despite the cloud that hung over them. Stripling became so popular that he was elected a member of the police force and finally chief of police of Danville.

He still was serving in this office when his identity was discovered and he was returned to Georgia more than two years ago to serve out his time.

Governors Hoke Smith, Joseph M. Brown and John M. Slaton refused clemency to Stripling.

CURED OF DRUG HABIT.

"Gentlemen—When my husband and I entered your Sanatorium, February 28th last, my husband had been using Morphine eighteen years and I had been using it thirty years—half of my life. It now gives me great pleasure to state that we were successfully treated and cured of the Drug Habit in four weeks, thanks to the James Sanatorium and all connected with it for our fine cure, for every one—the President, Doctors, Nurses and Servants—were all so sympathetic, kind and thoughtful that when I left I could say good-bye it was with much regret, for we did hate to leave, it seemed to us a heaven on earth. We miss the dear friends we made while there. We feel so thankful to the James Treatment and Sanatorium that we want to get out in the world and tell every drug user to go to you for relief before it is too late. The Sanatorium was full when we left, and there were still coming in. How many have you now? It made our hearts glad to see so many Whiskey and Drug victims leave for home cured and praising God for having sent them to the James Sanatorium. We can truthfully say that if anyone wants to get cured of the Drug or Whiskey habit, they can do so at the James Sanatorium, and we urge all who are in need of treatment to go to your Sanatorium. We feel so happy and free to be able to enjoy life as normal beings once more. At our ages we never believed that we could get relief. Mr. McCauley is sixty-six years of age and I am sixty. Notwithstanding this fact, we were taken off the drugs entirely and left there at the expiration of four short weeks. We will always have a tender feeling in our hearts for all connected with the Sanatorium. And now we must close. May God be with you and your good work is our honest prayer. Your true friends,

MR. AND MRS. S. D. MCAULEY.
Potts Camp, Miss., March 31, 1915."

CURED OF ALCOHOLISM.

Gentlemen—I have thought for the last year or two that I would give you a testimonial in regard to your treatmen for the Whiskey habit. I took your treatment in September, 1906, and I had been drinking off and on for four years. When I arrived at your Sanatorium I only weighed one hundred and twenty pounds, slept and ate very little; in fact, the only spectic I had was really for whiskey. I have never touched a drop since I finished my treatment—in fact, have had no desire whatever for liquor in any form. I sleep and eat well, have gained in weight and my general health is fine. I can truthfully say that if anyone desires to be cured of the Whiskey habit they can find relief at your Sanatorium, and I sincerely recommend this treatment to everyone reading this letter. I will take pleasure in answering letters from any interested person who may write me. With best wishes for your continued success, I am, your sincere friend, E. O. BRANCH.
Woodstock, Tenn., April 15, 1915.

STRUCK BY AUTO TRUCK, BOY'S LEG IS FRACTURED

A. Weinberg, Driver of Delivery Truck, Is Placed Under Arrest.

Gus Dunn, the 4-year-old son of A. F. Dunn, of 35 Curran street, was run over by a delivery truck of B. Bettis Packing company in front of 835 Marietta street, last night about 6 o'clock, sustaining a fractured leg, according to the police report of the accident by Call Officers R. B. Haslett and Lon W. Evans, who arrested A. Weinberg, driver of the truck.

The little boy was rushed to Grady hospital, where it was reported that his injuries were not serious. Besides the fractured leg, the child sustained several lacerations of his face and arms.

Elmer Driscoll, aged 17, of 124 East Fair street, broke his right arm in a fall while skating on the sidewalk at the corner of Trinity and Central avenues, about 7 o'clock last night.

Driscoll was removed to Grady, where he stated that he was skating on one skate and fell, turning a complete somersault before falling to the pavement.

GOVERNOR TOUCHED BY PLIGHT OF CONVICTS

The governor, discussing the appeal of the little daughter of Edgar Stripling, the life termer, who climbed on his knee and secured his promise of a pardon for her father, said it was one of the most pathetic incidents of the day.

WILL FREE MANY OTHERS.

"When that pretty little child climbed up on my knee and begged me to give her papa back to her, I could not resist. I told her to run immediately to her father and tell him I would send him back to his family. I cannot do so at once, but if I live out my term as governor I will free that man and many others, who have already had sufficient punishment meted out to them," said the governor.

"As the man Stripling, his little daughter and an older daughter gathered about and wept for joy, I had to turn my face to keep the members of my party from seeing my own tears, but I found that every man in the crowd likewise had tears in his eyes.

Speaking of the prison farm land, the governor said:

"It is the poorest land I have ever seen. I don't see how they raise anything at all on it. It is well suited for giving the convicts something to dig into and work during their terms. There are gullies that keep appearing constantly and it keeps them busy filling them and terracing the land.

"None of the state institutions have been discussed more generally by the people of the state in letters to me and in conversation than the state prison farm. Hundreds of people are complaining because the farm produced a few hundred bales of cotton last year. They claim it affected the price of cotton and was at the same time in competition with free labor."

The governor had little to say of the investigation of the attempt on the life of Frank. He was at Frank's bedside when physicians dressed the laceration in his neck.

"It was an ugly wound, and I don't see how the man can get well," said the governor. "The doctors, however, think differently. Frank was coughing considerably, which appeared to be a strain on him."

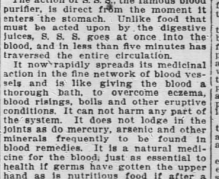
EXPLOSION OCCURS ON BRITISH STEAMER

New York, July 24.—An explosion of unknown origin occurred in the forward hold of the British freight steamer Cragside at her dock in the Hudson river here today and was followed by a fire which, however, was speedily checked. The Cragside, which was to leave here tonight for an English port, with a cargo of 160,000 bags of sugar, will be delayed a few days.

The fire and water damage to the steamer was estimated at $10,000, while the cargo of sugar valued at $144,000, is believed to be a total loss.

Germs Can't Stay With This Treatment

No Impurities Can Retain A Foothold—They're Driven Out.



The action of S. S. S. the famous blood purifier, is direct from the moment it enters the stomach. Unlike food that must be acted upon by the digestive juices, S. S. S. goes at once into the blood, and in less than five minutes has traversed the entire circulation.

It now rapidly spreads its medicinal action in the fine network of blood vessels and is like giving the blood a thorough bath, to overcome eczema, blood risings, boils and other eruptive conditions. It can not harm any part of the system. It does not lodge in the joints as do mercury, arsenic and other minerals frequently to be found in blood remedies. It is a natural medicine for the blood, just as essential to health if germs have gotten the upper hand as is nutritious food if after a spell of sickness the body calls for nourishment. Wherever you go you are sure to meet some one who used S. S. S. for the blood and is a willing witness to its wonderful power to overcome blood troubles. You can obtain S. S. S. in almost any drug store in the U. S., a significant fact as to its worth and its sterling reputation. Get a bottle today. It will do you good. Write to The Swift Specific Co., 104 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., if the directions with the bottle do not fully cover your case.

HELP FOR THE WOUNDED IN EUROPE IS PLANNED

Georgia Asked to Send Ambulance, Four Physicians and Eight Nurses.

An organization having for its purpose the relief of soldiers wounded in the European war has been formed in Atlanta, and will equip and transport to the French hospital corps, within the next few weeks, a fully appointed ambulance, with four attending physicians and eight nurses. The association has been named the Association of Georgia Physicians, and has offices in the Grand opera house building, under the supervision of Dr. F. E. May, executive secretary of the Georgia war relief committee for France and her allies.

Dr. May, as head of the ambulance committee, has written circular letters to the most prominent physicians and surgeons of the state urging them to help in the work of sending the ambulance to France, and setting forth the needs of the hospital corps of both sides of the great conflict.

According to Dr. May, the association expects to have no trouble in raising funds enough to equip the ambulance and he also thinks that numbers of young doctors will welcome the chance not only of helping humanity, but of getting the experience which would come from actual work on the battlefield.

Wishing to make clear the fact that the ambulance and help derived therefrom will be of as much benefit to one side as the other, Dr. May asks that all Atlantans and Georgians who wish to do so, give what help they can toward equipping the vehicle.

MRS. J. W. LITTLE DIED AT 4 O'CLOCK SATURDAY

Mrs. Little, wife of Joseph W. Little, estimator for the Russell Electric company, died at a local hospital Saturday afternoon at 4 o'clock, following an operation early in the week. The funeral will be held from the West End Baptist church Monday morning at 11 o'clock, followed by interment in Oakland. Rev. John F. Purser, the pastor, will officiate.

Mrs. Little was widely known among the musical people of the city, where her unusual musical talents brought her into prominence in church and social circles. She was born and reared in Atlanta and was also a graduate of the local schools and colleges. She was 24 years old.

Besides her husband, Mrs. Little is survived by her father, A. C. Turner, one brother, A. C. Turner, Jr., and two uncles, C. L. and J. C. A. Branan. Her mother was formerly Miss Pinkie Branan.

WILSON IS SUPPORTED BY PEOPLE OF WEST

Asheville, N. C., July 24.—The annual Sunday school conference of the Southern Methodist church at Lake Junaluska today heard the final reports of the general Sunday school board, whose improvements being shown in all departments.

The chief address of the day was delivered this afternoon by the Rev. J. A. B. Fry, of San Francisco. Mr. Fry declared that California and other western states strongly approved of President Wilson's conduct of existing international problems.

PLAN TO BETTER FARMS IN GEORGIA

Many high railroad officials, farm experts, bankers, merchants and practical farmers attended the meeting. They came from every part of Georgia and from adjoining states. They included Joseph A. McCord, governor of the Federal Reserve bank at Atlanta; J. J. Price, commissioner of agriculture; G. Gunby Jordan, head of large cotton factorage interests of Columbus; W. T. Gentry, president of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Co.; J. Howard Peyton, president of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis railroad, Senator Hardwick and Congressman Dudley Hughes, of Danville, about twenty members of the legislature, including members of the Chatham county delegation, and J. B. Hale, representative from Floyd county, who recently introduced the local option bill in the house, attended.

The party left Savannah at 1 o'clock for Tybee. On their arrival they were guests of the city and the board of trade at a Georgia products luncheon at Hotel Tybee. The meeting was called to order on the hotel pavilion directly after luncheon. The invocation was said during the luncheon by the Rt. Rev. F. A. Reese, bishop of Georgia.

Means Much for Georgia.

"This movement means much for Georgia," said Mayor Davant. "It means equally as much to the railroads, farmers and bankers.

"The state is entering on an era of farming prosperity that we never dreamed of. If all of us will work together we can make this state the rival of any in the union.

"Savannah is the mother of Georgia, and she is proud of her children. We welcome you back. Savannah is a part of the state, notwithstanding statements to the contrary, and she is proud of it. She is not a dominion in herself. After all, Savannah is Georgia's port, and we want you to consider her and make her the greatest port of the south."

McCord Sees Prosperity.

Mr. McCord told of signs of prosperity. He spoke on "The Banker and the Farmer; Their Economic Relations."

"Georgia is raising this year the cheapest crop from point of conditures in ten years," he said. "She can depend on the economic progress of the people to sustain her through the trying situation through which we are passing.

He declared that the relations between the farmer and banker should be cordial, and told of the wonderful strides the latter have made in recent years. He called the present system the greatest menace to progress agriculturally, deprecated that farmers of the south are paying the greatest part of the tariff tax because they did not raise foodstuffs at home. He urged smaller farms and intensified farming in addition to raising supplies at home.

"The war has been a detriment to the south," he said. "It places an embargo on cotton; it makes us pay more for our food." He denounced the proposal to guarantee basic prices as a most vicious law, which, he said, would destroy the whole banking system, and told how Germans raised practically everything they need at home, saying potatoes from the empire recently had been served in Atlanta hotels.

He praised the vast possibilities of the state, urged the establishment of a system of rural credits and vocational education for children.

Commissioner of Agriculture Price expressed fear that if Great Britain's embargo on cotton is not removed the south will be unable to get money to market the present crop, and asked Mr. McCord what the bankers would do.

"If the war continues and conditions are as they are now, there are we going to get money to handle the crop now in the fields?" he asked.

"Are we going to get money at reasonable interest, so we can hold our cotton if there is no market or the price is too low?"

"Till answer that when you get through," said Mr. McCord.

Interest in Diversification.

"There never was a time," Mr. Price went on, "when farmers were more interested in diversification. They are interested in getting the proper kind of live stock, the proper seed and such things more than they have ever been.

"The only question we have to consider," he continued, "is that of education. Educate your children so they can make a living and in after years they will call you blessed. Let them take advantage of the opportunities offered them.

"We need small farms where we can settle good, honest, white people all over the state of Georgia on 10-acre tracts. Then we will have pretty cottages with whitewashed fences and trees, gardens full of vegetables, yellow-legged chickens in the barnyard, hogs and cows. In the field the father and son will be plowing with fat mules. Inside that cottage you will find happiness. Go in and put your feet under the table and what you will get will be good enough for a king.

"Georgia has the land," he said; "we need farmers of the right kind. I am opposed to bringing immigrants indiscriminately. If you can bring the desirable kind I am willing to welcome them and when they are godspeed, but if we have to have the scum from other states, I say we don't need them."

Address by Warfield.

It probably was the address of Mr. Warfield that created the greatest impression. He told of the organization of the Southern Settlement and Development Organization, and how he reluctantly accepted the presidency. Since then, he declared, interest in the work of building up the south, the garden spot of the country, has grown until railroads, even those along whose lines the organization is doing no work, cheerfully defray their part of the expense, realizing that their prosperity depends in a large measure on the prosperity of the farmer.

His subject was "The Southern Settlement and Development Organization; What It Has Done and What It Offers to Do." "Under normal conditions," he said, "cotton will enrich the farmer more than any other crop. What is needed is greater production, closer farming. No one can predict when the war will end but at its termination the consumption will be greater than ever before. The south is almost an empire in itself. There are 250,000,000 acres of unoccupied land. It is out of all proportion. In Georgia, I am told, there are 11,000,000 acres idle that could be used."

Mr. Warfield suggested organizing farm companies similar to those in Maryland and Virginia to induce colonization, saying the most effective work is done in the form of communities. He declared co-operation of all interests is essential and that the south, while it may be hardest hit, is quickest to recover. He expressed the belief that the European conflict can not continue indefinitely.

"What I am doing in connection with the organization is because of my interest in the south," he said. "I am a southerner and my people have been southerners."

YOUNG ATLANTAN ENTERS PRINCETON FROM PEACOCK SCHOOL

The following extract taken from a letter from Charles H. Patterson, registrar of Princeton University, to Prof. D. C. Peacock, head of the Peacock School for Boys in this city, explains itself:

"I am very glad to inform you that Harry Augustus Etheridge, Jr., has successfully passed all his examinations for admission to this institution in September, 1915. His record at our entrance examinations this year is above the average and reflects credit upon him and upon the school."

Mr. Etheridge is the son of the well-known lawyer, H. A. Etheridge. He entered the Peacock School from the secondary grade grammar schools of the city, and spent four years in the Peacock school. Technically this reduces the time in high school to three years, and is flattering to both the pupil and the Peacock school that there was no attempt at special coaching or "stuffing" to enable him to enter college.

The friends of this young man will learn with pleasure of the remarkable record he has scored. His success is shared equally by the Peacock School, of which he was a brilliant student, and to whose splendid system of training the young Atlantan was able so honorably to enter the big university in so short a time.—(adv.)

STUDEBAKER COMPANY ISSUES "PROOF BOOK"

Taking the public into complete confidence to the extent of putting in print a detailed description, with suitable illustration, of sales and manufacturing methods, is an innovation among American manufacturers. For years it has been the custom of great corporations to jealously guard the processes of manufacture, as well as matters of selling policy. This has given rise to much skepticism on the part of the outside public, many of whom came to believe that advertised statements were, in many cases, either false or greatly exaggerated.

With the desire to place before the world all the facts connected with its manufacturing system, three years ago the Studebaker Corporation of America issued an illustrated story of its motor car manufacturing process, under the title, "The Proof Book." This unique piece of literature—first of its kind ever published—immediately sprung into great popularity and aside from a general distribution was used for reference by many high schools and colleges. The "Proof Book" was translated in several languages, and met with probably a greater demand in conservative Europe than any other American automobile book ever published.

The "New Proof Book" is composed of thirteen chapters. The first chapter gives a brief history of the Studebaker family from the time Peter Studebaker and his family arrived in America from Holland in 1736, up to the formation of the present company in 1852 by John Mohler Studebaker and his five sons. This book is dedicated to the sole remaining member of this justly notable family, J. M. Studebaker, now past 80 years old and honorary president of the corporation.

Rockey-Watters.

A pretty wedding and one of interest to a large circle of friends, both in Atlanta and Philadelphia, was that of Miss Julia Ella Rockey and Mr. Walter Archer Watters, which took place at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James Wildy Rockey, 92 Gordon street, last Wednesday evening.

The bride wore a traveling suit of dark blue cloth and carried a shower bouquet of bride roses and lillies of the valley. Miss Olive Belle Rockey, the bride's sister, was maid of honor and Mr. Lawrence Sparmer Watters was the groom's best man.

The ceremony was performed by Rev. Wallace Rogers. Only the immediate family and a few intimate friends were present.

Mrs. Waters, as Miss Julia Rockey, was a very popular young lady and will be greatly missed in West End, where she has made her home for the past seven years.

After an informal reception, Mr. and Mrs. Watters left immediately for Baltimore and later to Palleton, Harford county, Maryland, where they will make their home.

Mrs. Tucker's Visit.

On her recent tour of the west, Mrs. Henry H. Tucker had the opportunity through an invitation from President and Mrs. Smith of the Mormon church to visit them at their private residence known as the Bee Hive, in Salt Lake City. The name has been given the home on account of the resemblance to an old fashioned bee hive presented by the ornamental cupola topping the house. Mrs. Tucker made the acquaintance of President and Mrs. Smith on the steamship Manchuria en route from San Francisco to Honolulu, to which point they were going to visit a Mormon colony located there. In some way Mr. and Mrs. Smith learned of the presence on board of the Atlanta representative to the National Y. W. C. A. convention at San Francisco, introduced themselves, and did everything in their power to add to the pleasure of the ocean voyage and her stay on the islands. On reaching Salt Lake City, en route home, Mrs. Tucker found no more formal invitation awaiting her, and was charmed with the hospitality extended to her. The Bee Hive is a large, modern residence, unostentatious and dignified in its outward appearance. Inside, the spacious rooms are handsomely furnished, the atmosphere being that of refinement and culture. The daughter of the house, a beautiful girl of some eighteen years, highly educated and accomplished, contributed much to the pleasure of the visit. On leaving, Mrs. Tucker was presented with copies of two of the most complete histories of the church, autographed by President and Mrs. Smith.

Mrs. Tucker was also taken to hear the magnificent organ in the tabernacle, where is given every day of the year by the church a concert as a compliment to the strangers visiting the city, and also in perpetuation of the Mormon religion, which same idea is carried out in the beautiful statuary of the city which commemorates the chief events in the church history, even the streets of the city being numbered from the tabernacle as a center.

Quartered at the Central hotel, Honolulu, during the time Mrs. Tucker was there, was the crew of a German man-of-war which ran into the port for the protection of the United States from a Japanese vessel which had attempted to capture it. The Japanese ship remained on watch just out to sea, and the Germans were forced to remain in Honolulu over the time limit of the military rule governing the time that a ship of one nation may remain under the protection of another during war conditions. Under these rules the German vessel will now be obliged to remain at Honolulu until the conclusion of the war. Mrs. Tucker states that when she left Honolulu for San Francisco the relentless Japanese ship was still on the watch.

Corbett-Deaton.

At the beautiful country home of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Corbett, near Alamo, Tenn., their daughter, Mary Elizabeth, was married to Mr. W. H. Deaton, of Gainesville, Ga., on Thursday evening, July 15, at 8 o'clock.

The house was tastefully decorated, and a handsome hospitality was extended the wedding company of one hundred and fifty.

Mr. Otis Aspray, of Covington, and Mr. Ivy S. Roberts, of Nashville, were ushers. The groom was attended by his brother, Mr. E. T. Deaton, of Memphis, Tenn. The maid of honor was Miss Flora Hart, of Jackson.

Little Misses Mildred Redmond and Tommie Lou Corbett were ribbon-bearers, and Miss Annie Lou Acred played the wedding march.

Rev. E. S. Baker, of Dyersburg, performed the ceremony.

Mr. and Mrs. Deaton will visit in Gainesville and will be at home after July 20 with Mr. and Mrs. Corbett.

Rose Hill House Party.

At the McMillans summer home, "Rose Hill," on the Chistotes river, Mr. and Mrs. Z. S. Lewis and family, Mr. and Mrs. John Holliday, Mrs. Ware Holliday and Mrs. J. A. Krouse have been spending the summer.

They were joined by Mrs. W. V. McMillan and family, Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Coleman and family, Miss Lillian Evans and Mr. Archie McMillan, who are enjoying all the pleasures of camp life.

Dancing Party.

Mr. and Mrs. J. E. Spurlock gave a beautiful dance Saturday evening at their home on Georgia avenue in honor of Miss Tilly Woolvin, of Abbeville, Ga., who is the guest of Miss Fay Slaughter.

The house was beautifully decorated with palms and mid-summer blossoms. Refreshments were served during the evening. Mrs. Spurlock wore a gown of yellow chiffon and lace. Miss Elvena Neal, who assisted Mrs. Spurlock in entertaining her guests, wore a dancing frock of yellow crepe de chine. Miss Woolvin wore a becoming gown of green chiffon.

Seventy-five guests enjoyed Mr. and Mrs. Spurlock's hospitality.

Miss Lillian Carter, of Atlanta, and her cousin, Miss Sue Brinkley, who are the guests of Miss Carter's mother, Mrs. H. S. Courtney, at Northport, L. I., won the beauty prizes at a unique fair given at Northport for the benefit of Trinity church. The prizes were handkerchiefs made by Miss Margaret Wilson, the president's daughter. Miss Brinkley received four times as many votes as her opponents, and was the recipient of enthusiastic applause when the honors were awarded. She is the niece of Mrs. Courtney.

Federation of Organizations Now Working For the Child, Suggested by Mrs. R. L. Grant

Mrs. Robert Lee Grant, formerly of Chicago, now of Atlanta, makes the timely suggestion that the various organizations in Atlanta and institutions for the welfare of the child should be in some way federated, so that the effort of one would not be duplicated by the other, and yet that all might correlate their efforts.

Mrs. Grant describes such an organization in Chicago called the Children's league, where the heads of all movements making for the welfare of children met at intervals and discussed their purposes and activities. There is one day observed as Children's day, when, through subscriptions or a large entertainment funds are raised and distributed among the various agencies for child labor.

Among the many institutions in Atlanta for children in need or dependent is the Home for the Friendless, the Georgia Home Society for the Adoption of Children, the Atlanta Children's home, the Sheltering Arms society, the Free Kindergarten association, the Home for Crippled Children, the social settlement homes, where children are looked after in various ways. Besides these are organizations which have special committees looking to the welfare of the child in the home, in the school, in the factory, in the hospital and the various church societies which aim in various ways to look after needy children.

A board of common interest, which would have upon it a member from all institutions for children, and all organizations looking to their welfare, it is pointed out, could prove a very helpful agency in placing children, with always the information pertaining to children which is on file with the Associated Charities. Agencies knowing more about the work of each other will be enabled to do more direct and efficacious work, and in time the problem of the child who needs help might be dealt with more methodically and more economically.

Mrs. Robert Lee Grant, who believes the various organizations making for the welfare of the child in Atlanta should be federated.

HEALTH, BEAUTY AND HAPPINESS ARE MATTERS OF DIET; FOOD AND THE BALLOT INTERDEPENDENT, SAYS MRS. LAIDLAW

A GREAT many people have had the pleasure of hearing and seeing Mrs. James Lees Laidlaw, suffragist leader, while they were the audience and she was the speaker at some votes for women gathering.

And it is safe to say that a majority of these persons have found their thoughts deflected from the subject in hand for at least a brief instant while they wondered what was the golden secret which keeps Mrs. Laidlaw so beautifully glowing and sparkling through all the rigors of exciting campaigns. A little bird whispered that it was a secret of diet. Armed with this inside information, the interviewer asked Mrs. Laidlaw to explain the magic regimen.

Hazeldean, the country home of the Laidlaws, situated at Sands Point, Long Island, has only twice changed hands since the King James grant. It is a beautiful low lying house 'way off by itself on a hill top. From most of its windows the Sound can be seen and from its terraces and loggias there is borne the bewitching breath of roses and honeysuckle. The visitor in making the rounds of the grounds is introduced to many shrubs and trees. Whatever the Laidlaws may be in politics, they are individualists in regard to growing things. They know all of their big stretch of out of doors pretty well by heart, and one receives a pleasant impression that the garden is part of the family.

"Diet," said Mrs. Laidlaw as she led the way to the vine shaded terrace at the rear of the house, "is one of the things in which I have been intensely interested for a long time.

"Matthew Arnold has said that conduct is three-fourths of life. When you consider that efficiency, mental balance and much else that enters into the make-up of a human being are largely dependent on the digestion I think it is not too much to say that food is nine-tenths of life.

"I believe that the way to a nation's intelligence is through its stomach. Without proper nutrition no nation will rise to intellectual heights or to any great degree of efficiency. It is woman's part to nourish the race intelligently so as to add to the sum total of efficiency, comfort and happiness.

Diet and Ballot Interdependent.

"You want me to talk about diet, but, irrepressibly, all this matter of obtaining better diet goes back to conditions which must be regulated by governmental action. You ask me not to talk suffrage, but, I submit, how otherwise, except with the ballot, is a woman to be equipped to deal with conditions such as those which affect her right to obtain proper food for herself and her family?"

"You see, we aren't talking suffrage," she said, innocently; "we're talking causes and effects."

"Women as mothers and as nurses are the people who take care of the health of the other members of the family.

"The man of the house has a headache, one of the sons has a stomach ache or it is discovered that the little children of the household are not being properly nourished.

"Probably some of these ills are due to the fact that the family has been eating fruits treated with arsenic, cream treated with formaldehyde, or wheat with all the strength giving elements removed.

"But the wife and mother is forced to deal only with results. She must care for her suffering family as best she may, but, as is always the case with women deprived of any part in governmental affairs, she can deal only with effect; she cannot deal with causes; she has had no part in the regulation of causes, and without the power of the ballot she can have none.

Man Ought to Learn Better.

"Everybody, of course, does not agree with me as to diet. From my point of view, being a vegetarian, I consider that the cleanest, most wholesome and most normal food is vegetable food. I use the word in its broader sense to include grains, nuts, fruits, &c. I use also butter, eggs and milk, which is not according to the strict vegetarian code. My regimen is not followed by all the members of our household, and for the others poultry and occasionally roast lamb are provided, but I never have had a piece of roast beef on my table since I have been married. Fish we never use except when we are giving a dinner."

"But you let your little daughter have meat?"

"Yes," confessed Mrs. Laidlaw; "lamb chops and bacon and chicken, just a little of these. I really don't think they do her any good, but I haven't quite the courage to insist on her being brought up without any meat at all. If anything should happen it might be said that it was because she had been brought up without meat.

"But it seems perfectly evident that the strongest animals are those which live on a herbivorous diet. They have the most enduring strength and are less subject to bursts of ferocity. No doubt necessity drove men to eat flesh as the most available life sustaining thing. But because man always has eaten flesh, so far as our knowledge goes, is no reason that he always should do so. The progress of civilization has been marked by the growth of agriculture, and coincident with the culture of peoples has come the development of exquisite nuts, fruits, vegetables, &c. From the days when the earliest woman tent keeper, with the woman's food preparing instinct, planted a seed which some wandering stranger brought her from a far land down to the days of Burbank there has been marvellous advance in the growing of wonderful viands.

"But meat always has remained the same and it is often brought to my attention when I am dining where a reeking roast or little birds with their toes turned up are brought on the table that there has been little progress along this line since the fleshy feast of Cedric the Saxon and before that from the time when the cave man turned an amorphous bit of meat on a stick. It is significant that the most exquisite thing with which to disguise the near-cannibalism of modern meat eating is to fringe it around with bright colored vegetables. The only thing we have been able to accomplish with meats is the effete development of tripe, pâte-de-foie gras, &c., the parts of the animal which even the savage cave man cast aside."

"Do you think the vegetarian diet much better for the complexion?" Mrs. Laidlaw was asked.

"I hope this isn't going to be a beauty article," she exclaimed; "because I don't think I could pause in the midst of a busy suffrage campaign to talk about the complexion." A little smile curled the corners of Mrs. Laidlaw's mouth.

"Naturally," she admitted, "whatever is good for the health is good for the complexion. There are the wholesome nourishing grains, for instance.

● Mrs James Lees Laidlaw does her own cooking in camp She is ably assisted by her little daughter Louise Mr Laidlaw cuts the fire wood and catches the fish. The location of the camp is a secret It is far away, deep in the woods, and there Mr. and Mrs. Laidlaw and Louise disappear every summer No other people are near them. They live in camp alone and play like they are pioneers.

"A grain of wheat is a perfect food balance. The nice little heart of the grain gives the proteids, the outer part is the heat producing element and in the husks are the phosphates and the mineral materials.

"But in spite of their great nutritive value and their extreme cheapness grains are too much neglected as a part of the diet. I think it is largely because most people think of the grains as furnishing only an inevitable and unexciting breakfast dish. But grains can be baked and browned, croquetted and soufflèd, and in combination with other vegetables, with eggs, cheese, &c., will be found to afford an infinite variety of delicious dishes.

Green peppers and Spanish peppers, tomatoes, chestnuts, mushrooms and truffles in combination with rice, hominy, cornmeal and samp are extremely palatable, nourishing and not at all difficult to prepare.

"In preparing grains it is of the utmost importance to remember that their value does not come out unless they have been properly boiled and cooked so that all the nice fine little fibres have been separated. They may be washed with cold water and that water poured off, but after they have been put on the fire the water should never be poured off, as part of the value of the grains would be lost. The water in which they are cooked can be added to as it cooks away.

Delicious Food in Camp.

"As such long cooking is necessary I always have found it of great practical use to keep a jellied mould of grain—wheat, cornmeal or hominy, for instance—so that at any time when I want to prepare a meal I can cut off slices for grilling, frying or for a score of other uses. Hominy is the best of all to use in this way, although even rice may be cooked so that it can be kept nicely in these moulds. These jellied moulds of grain may be sliced and the slabs used under fried tomatoes or broiled mushrooms. Dipped in egg and broiled or fried they are very good, or they may be scalloped and take the place on the menu usually reserved to the eternal potato.

"Another thing that we always do when we are in camp is to use these slabs of jellied grain with alternate layers of vegetables. Whatever vegetables are at hand may be used up in this way. A delicious dish is made of a slab of jellied hominy, then a layer of egg plant, then another layer of hominy, and on top of this a layer of tomatoes or lima beans or peas. Season this with a little thyme or a little cheese and steam in the chafing dish or bake in the oven. Before putting in to cook beat up one egg and pour over the whole to lift it a little. Instead of baking powder always use an egg to make the thing puffy.

"The trouble with most cooks is that they are apt to stick too closely to an original recipe. This sort of dish may be varied in almost any way that is convenient. Spinach may be used instead of egg plant and other vegetables added if there are some to be used up.

"A person would puff and puff at being set down to a luncheon at which the principal dish was breakfast food, but with a little clever flavoring and combining as a disguise the breakfast food appears as an extremely appetizing viand. When we go away to our camp we don't take any servants. For three weeks we hide in the woods and do our own cooking. Then I can cook whatever I please in my own way and introduce any number of novelties.

"The use of sauces gives another opportunity for variety in preparing these dishes of grain. Brown mushroom sauce, egg sauce, attractive red tomato sauce and a delicate curry sauce are among those which I have used. A sauce of egg with a little bit of curry and sprinklings of Spanish pepper to make it look pretty poured over fried hominy or cornmeal makes a satisfactory addition to a meal. A plain white sauce with a good deal of finely chopped parsley is also good over grain croquettes. Caper sauce is good if you want something a little more wicked. Of course caper sauce is out of the class of the perfectly innocuous, but if used sparingly it is not bad for one.

"Our cooks give us Hollandaise sauce always on asparagus or artichoke, so that we forget that it is equally palatable on many other things. It is excellent, for instance, on fried or grilled egg plant. Egg plant is better grilled than fried, but if frying is more convenient it is possible to do so delicately, so that it will not come out encased in what appears to be a thick metal coating.

Potatoes Merely Incidental.

"Potatoes should be an incident, not a bulwark of diet. Potatoes creamed, soufflèd or used au gratin are all very well, but the ubiquitous and inevitable potato staring one in the face at every meal is a thing to which even comparatively epicurean people have acceded to as an unalterable tradition. Instead there are such wonderful combinations of vegetables and the many grain dishes.

"In selecting vegetables the housewife often overlooks the properties of each one. Often I have sat down to a meal in which corn, rice and potatoes were served, all starchy foods; mashed potatoes and macaroni are also frequently served together, although, except for the little cheese over the macaroni, they have the same food value. Care should be taken in selecting vegetables to get a hydrocarbide and a proteid vegetable paired off at any given meal with a dish of a tonic or mineral bearing vegetable. For instance, potatoes or hominy or spaghetti with green peas or lima beans or mushrooms, and cauliflower or spinach or asparagus; or a salad may be substituted for the third group to preserve nature's balance.

How to Judge Breadstuffs.

"As to the inevitable accompaniment of eating—the various kinds of breadstuffs—the criterion always should be:—

"Is it rough or smooth?

"Is it doughy and wudgy or crisp and puffy?

"Is it close or open?

"Is it brown and delicious or soggy and half baked?

"Are you getting a white bread gold brick or a rich, full grained product?

"As a nation of breadmakers we are far behind many foreign countries. I forget what physician it was who said that 'wads of fresh dough in the stomach have killed as many people as strong drink.' The best bread is a whole wheat product baked until it is dry and flavorful.

"But, generally speaking, bread is no friend of mine. My little girl never has tasted white bread. We usually use graham or zwieback. The best way to use bread, it seems to me, is to make browned bread crumbs of it. I think most people who cook at all find that it is necessary to have a jar of browned bread crumbs always on hand. They are the making of ever so many dishes. Creamed eggs, for instance, sprinkled with these bread crumbs and browned in the oven are ever so much more savory than without this covering.

Make Soup Delicious.

"An epicure would turn with scorn from a nutritious and inexpensive line of soups that I have in mind, such as black bean, split pea or dry green pea, but put a slice of lemon, a round of egg and a little chopped celery in black bean soup, add a bit of tomato, a dash of thyme to split pea soup or perhaps a subtle note of bay leaf and you have what I would characterize as not so much highly flavored as delicious savory. It is appetizing without being irritating to the palate, as other forms of seasoning are. Curry should always be used in the most delicate way, not as an assault upon the palate, but as a faint epicurean flavor. The same is true of bay leaf.

"I had the subject of grain diet called to my attention when I was a student in Barnard College. I was working in one of Professor Giddings' classes in sociology, and we were given a district of the city to visit with a view to studying the socialization of the families. We made friendly visits and I remember feeling green and timid about talking to experienced housewives until one day I happened to call at a house where mother and grandmother were working despairingly over a child very ill with dysentery. What was my horror to see them put the poor child up to the table and give him a potato and a piece of fresh white bread to eat. I made a wild protest and begged them to prepare some barley water and to give the child some zwieback instead of the fresh bread. To my astonishment I found that they did not know the use of barley at all and never toasted or dried a piece of bread.

The Poor Cannot Use the Fire.

"On further questioning I found that they had never any cornmeal, oatmeal or wheatena in the house, and that the use of the nutritious grains was practically a closed book to them. It is easy enough to criticise these families for failing to make use of these economical foods until one realizes that their facilities for cooking are so poor and that the lack of fuel is so widespread that it would be difficult for many of them to use the fire for a number of hours or to do any but the simplest cooking.

"It is easy to talk about proper dietetics when all the means of cooking food properly are at hand, but undoubtedly even taking into consideration the tremendous economic pressure under which the majority of people live it is no doubt true that with proper knowledge the food value of the diet would be very much improved even in the neediest home.

"Dried vegetables and dried fruits are among the staples which are often neglected by the housewife, and yet they afford an excellent opportunity to reduce the expenses of the table without cutting down the food values. Fresh vegetables, fresh fruits, meat and fish are expensive. The dried vegetables and fruits are just as nutritive and much less expensive, and they are often more digestible, especially for children and people with delicate stomachs. For a few cents one can prepare a dish of cornmeal soufflé or scalloped rice or hominy and a dish of kidney beans with cooked apricots for dessert. A head of lettuce dressed in oil and lemon is an added luxury, which of course would strain some purses impossibly in winter, but is not beyond the reach of any one in summer time.

Must Use More Salads.

"One can scarcely say too much for the value of salads. Five or ten cents diverted from the meat to such a dish would keep many a family in health during the spring and summer which otherwise will fall in health owing to the toxins produced in the system by masses of fleshy fibres which they have consumed.

"And, in conclusion, please say that one of the reasons that great numbers of women are working so hard for suffrage is that they want to have something to say at first hand about this diet business—they want to be able to work directly for pure food for everybody and for other needful things which will enable all the housekeepers of the land not only to buy nourishing food but to have facilities for cooking it properly."

In Message to Legislature Governor Will Recommend State Farm Improvements

BY NE DW'INTOSH.
(Special Staff Correspondent.)

Milledgeville, Ga., July 24.—(Special.) Based upon his personal investigation of the attempt made by William Creen upon the life of Leo M. Frank and the fight Wednesday between two prisoners, Frank Reid and Charlie Millen, and his inspection of the condition of the entire state prison farm and reformatory properties, Governor Nat Harris upon his return to Atlanta, will draft a special message to the general assembly recommending measures that he believes should be taken to remedy conditions at the farm.

Just what the governor's comments or recommendations before the general assembly will be he would not today disclose.

To Urge Improvements.

"That is one of the things about which I do not desire to talk," said Governor Harris in answer to inquiries. "I prefer to weigh the matter and let my first comment be to the general assembly itself."

The views of the governor and the prison commission upon things seen today, however, were so thoroughly in accord that it is likely that in his message he will recommend all the improvements for which the appropriations committee has urged a special appropriation of $30,000, as well as other details which the commission has from time to time asked.

Among other things that Governor Harris will recommend in his message to the general assembly will be that convict labor be used as far as possible for the construction of any new buildings that may be built by appropriations made by this assembly. He will also urge that the appropriation be increased.

Governor Harris' many talks with old and disabled prisoners led to the general belief that when he returns to his office he will more frequently grant clemency in such cases. There are many such prisoners who are hardly more than wards of the state's charity.

The governor explained that his visit to the farm was as much to inspect conditions as to investigate the Frank incident.

Commission to Meet.

The prison commission will hold a meeting soon after they get back to Atlanta and go over the general situation as seen by them today. Chairman R. E. Davison, of the commission, stated that this meeting might probably draft a report touching upon the Frank affair, the fight between Reid and Millen and general conditions. It is not improbable that this report will be submitted to the governor for his consultation in drafting his message to the assembly.

No Blame for Staff.

Members of the prison commission declared that they have no reasons to believe that any of the official staff at the prison is responsible through any neglect of duty for the fact that Creen secured the knife or for any other circumstances surrounding the affair.

"It is simply one of those unfortunate things that just sometimes happen," said one member of the commission.

Governor Harris, in turn, said that he did not believe the prison commission is responsible in any way for recent events at the prison or for the conditions existing there.

After completing their inspection of the state's property here this afternoon Governor Harris and his party visited Milledgeville, and were escorted about town by Congressmen Carl Vinson, of the tenth district; Mayor Miller S. Bell, President M. M. Parks, of the Georgia Normal and Industrial institute, and Dr. E. A. Tignor, secretary of the board of trustees. They then left for Macon by automobile, whence they will return to Atlanta by train.

Looked in a room at the state prison farm, Governor Harris and Adjutant General J. Van Holt Nash heard William Creen tell why he tried to kill Leo M. Frank Saturday night a week ago. Creen stated that in attacking Frank he was attempting to rid the prison of a man whose presence he believed would result in a mob attack on the prison and the consequent loss of innocent lives.

He had formed this opinion, he said, by reading newspapers and had alone planned his attack simply because he felt it was his duty.

Governor Harris stated, following his talk with Creen, that he did not hold Warden James E. Smith or other officials responsible.

"I don't like it," he said, in referring to conditions.

Creen told his story in the presence only of Governor Harris and Adjutant General J. Van Holt Nash, the governor asking, in accordance with the prisoner's request, that he be granted a private audience.

Creen, unmanacled for the first time since his attack on Frank, was closeted with the governor in the room adjoining that in which Frank lies wounded. All doors leading from the room were bolted.

Creen began by reciting to the governor the history of his own case up to the time of the attack on Frank. He told briefly of the fact that he had killed two men and was serving a life sentence.

Creen Tells Story.

"Why did you do this?" asked the governor, referring to the attack on Frank.

Creen's story, as repeated by the governor and General Nash, substantially was:

"I had heard talk of the danger of Frank being kept here.

"I felt that as long as he was here there was danger of the prison being attacked. I was afraid the guards and the people making the attack would shoot at each other and people be killed, so I came to the conclusion that it was my duty to save the people from the danger to which Frank's presence exposed them. I determined that Frank was subjecting us to danger, so decided that I would kill him.

"When did you conceive this idea?" asked Governor Harris.

"A few days before it happened," replied Creen. "I studied over it and decided to carry my plan out."

"Now tell the governor the truth, Creen," said Governor Harris. "Was there any suggestion made to you from the outside?"

Creen on Knees.

"I swear that I never talked of the Frank case to anyone inside or out of the prison before or after the attack."

"Did you mean to kill him?" Creen was asked.

"I did," he replied calmly. "I felt it was my duty."

Asked where he obtained his knife, Creen replied that he had stepped in from the kitchen on the Friday night before he attacked Frank and had hidden it in his cot.

After Creen's talk with the governor the newspaper correspondents were called in to hear Creen's statement in reference to charges that he had been beaten by prison authorities.

In the presence of the correspondents Governor Harris asked him whether he had ever been whipped here.

No Fault to Find.

Creen bared his back which was said to have been scarred from floggings. There was no evidence of his ever having been beaten.

"Have you ever been mistreated here in anyway?" Creen was asked.

There was no answer, but the prison commissioners and the governor stated that Creen a few minutes before had told them he had no fault to find.

raying neutrals against us. On the contrary, it must be our intention to avoid everything unnecessarily endangering the well comprehended rights of neutral states."

The Germania and The Boersen Zeitung briefly discuss the note in terms very similar to those of The Lokal Anzeiger.

The Germania assures its readers that the recent inactivity of the submarines was due to bad weather and not to a cessation of submarine warfare. The Boersen Zeitung says:

"We will not maintain that the refusal of our proposal is an intentional brusqueness; nevertheless, President Wilson's policies appear in the latest note to have found a peculiarly vigorous expression."

Flatly Rejects German Proposals.

The Tages Zeitung points out that the American note flatly rejects the German proposals and adds:

"Adoption of President Wilson's standpoint would be equivalent to a death sentence for the German submarine campaign. It is utterly impossible for submarines to establish whether there are Americans aboard merchantmen which are attacked, and as a consequence all ships could proceed freely. The American attitude is neither friendly nor necessary to the American interest, nor neutral in spirit. Principles are brought to the foreground and practical conciliatory proposals are rejected in order to relieve our enemies from the effects of a policy increasingly injurious to them and correspondingly advantageous to the Germans."

The Kreuz Zeitung says:

HOW VON BERNSTORFF INTERPRETS NOTE.

It was learned in German circles here tonight that the German interpretation of the statement in the last American note that the lives of noncombatants may not be put in jeopardy unless a vessel resists or seeks to escape was expected to satisfy the German military authorities of the fact that the United States has not insisted on a complete abandonment of submarine warfare as such. It was believed that this point would be considered as a concession and would add weight to that element of official and public opinion in Germany which is urging a more conciliatory attitude toward the United States.

Count von Bernstorff viewed with satisfaction the statement in the American note that the United States would insist upon the freedom of the seas "from whatever quarter violated." He hopes this will be accepted in Germany as a proof that the Washington government intends to insist upon its rights with the same firmness toward Great Britain as elsewhere. The German ambassador believes that the American attitude would probably cause American citizens taking passage on British ships to demand of the captains of such vessels that their lives be safeguarded by an adherence to the precepts of international law in obeying the warnings of war craft.

Conflicting reports reached the German embassy today as to what occurred in the Orduna case. According to statements made by some of the passengers on the ship, no torpedo was fired by the German submarine from which the liner escaped. They saw only the shell fire at the ship. Lacking any official statement from Berlin, embassy officials would not discuss the Orduna incident.

NOTE VERY STRONG, LONDON EDITORS SAY.

London, July 24.—"These are the strongest words diplomacy could employ without actually breaking relations with the power to which they are addressed, and if we apply the usual standard of interpretation to these, we must call this note at least a penultimatum," is The Westminster Gazette's estimate of America's new note to Germany. "It leaves nothing to be desired in the firmness wherewith it reasserts the principles laid down in the previous notes."

The Pall Mall Gazette says:

"President Wilson's much criticised self-restraint has enabled him to intervene at last in a fashion which invokes the national honor and the national conscience of America, both at their highest integrity. . . . Today's note is an explicit rejection of the familiar doctrine of 'necessity,' which has underlain German excuses and expostulations."

Referring to the use of the expression, "deliberately unfriendly," The Pall Mall Gazette says:

"Its place at the end of the note will deprive Berlin of an excuse of misreading or ignoring the frame of mind wherein the document has been composed."

The Evening Standard says:

"By judicious paragraphs it would be possible to prove that President Wilson is splendidly firm or miserably weak."

While holding that President Wilson "seems to be establishing a sort of diplomatic trench warfare," The Standard considers that "the note marks a substantial advance over its predecessors. . . . It is true it does not in itself commit the president to any particular action, but it puts on the shoulders of the Germans a responsibility which they will not hesitate to assume."

The Standard predicts that Berlin will not accept the note never had been written.

Covington, Ga., July 24.—(Special.) Rev. W. H. McCart, held for the killing of Dock Smith forty-five years ago, is ready to stand trial in Newton county superior court next week.

"I have made all other arrangements with both God and man but this one thing, and I want to get this settled before I die," he stated to officers when he allowed himself to be arrested on the old warrant which officials had dug up from the musty files.

Since the killing of Smith in 1870, McCart has been a wanderer on the face of the globe. He has been a laborer, a government secret service man and in recent years a minister doing missionary work in the Hawaiian islands.

McCart returned to Georgia recently to visit his sister and made no secret of his identity. He has engaged King & Johnson to defend him at his trial, which will be prosecuted by Colonel George Napier.

The killing with which McCart is charged is said to have been closely by Smith's striking McCart's mother.

Convicts at State Farm Ask Pardon For McNaughton

Milledgeville, Ga., July 24.—(Special.) Over one hundred and thirty-five convicts at the state farm have signed a petition asking Governor Nat Harris to pardon Dr. J. W. McNaughton, whose prompt attention probably saved the life of Leo Frank last Saturday night, following the attack on Frank by J. William Creen.

The petition reads:

"For nearly two years Dr. McNaughton has ministered to our sufferings. He has answered our calls at any time, day or night, and always cheerfully and willingly. We have learned to love him and feel grateful to him for the reason that he has devoted his life and efforts for nearly two years to relieving suffering.

"He has our utmost confidence and we fully believe in him. We have tried him in the crucible of prison life, and he has not been found wanting.

"We beg of you that you harken to our petition and prayer that you grant mercy and liberty to this Christian man who has done so much to render our lives more endurable while in prison and who has unfailingly answered our every demand with a smile.

"We beg of you that your excellency will grant a full and speedy pardon to Dr. McNaughton, who we believe fully merits it."

Dr. McNaughton, when told of the petition, declared it was purely voluntary on the part of his fellow prisoners and expressed deep appreciation to them. McNaughton is serving a life term, having been convicted in Emanuel county of the murder of Fred Flanders. There always has been considerable doubt expressed in his case, and for this reason his original sentence—death—was commuted by Governor John M. Slaton to life imprisonment.

MARGARET COLEMAN DIES OF MENINGITIS

The countless friends in Atlanta of Mrs. Florence Wadley Coleman, of Macon, will be grieved to learn of the death of her daughter, Margaret, which occurred Friday night at the hospital in Macon, Ga. She was taken sick while on a visit in Macon, with her mother a short time ago. They were at the home of friends, but later, that every attention might be secured, she was removed to the hospital. Fever was followed by an attack of meningitis, which she could not survive.

The little girl was beautiful and bright, and her passing brings sorrow to a large family connection. She was the daughter of the late Everett Coleman, of Macon, and besides her mother is survived by one brother, her grandmother, Mrs. S. P. Coleman, of Macon; her maternal grandmother, Mrs. William Wadley, and her aunt, Mrs. Frank Hawkins, of Atlanta.

PRESIDENT WILSON RETURNS TO CORNISH

Cornish, N. H., July 24.—President Wilson arrived here this afternoon for his second visit of the year to the summer white house. He has no definite plans as to the length of his stay.

The president said he did not come for a vacation, but "for an uninterrupted opportunity for work." He brought a mass of official papers and expects to spend much of his time in his study.

"PRIDE," —that is not Vainglorious

PRIDE in perfecting the Product.
Pride in Achievement won, step by step, through frank and fair means only.

Pride in the maintenance of a high standard of Quality—in a reputation for Reliability—DEPENDABILITY—and "the Square Deal" at all times.

The B. F. Goodrich Co. has been making history in the Rubber Industry, for more than 45 years.

It has always been the Leader!

It has almost never had a "Boom," or the reaction that follows Boom.

It has been Conservative in all its moves—never Experimenting at its Customers' Expense, yet never lagging behind first place in the Procession.

It has been the Pioneer in nearly all great Improvements made in the Working of Rubber.

And, it has grown steadily, surely, as well as stupendously, until the largest Rubber Factory in the World today, is that of The B. F. Goodrich Co. at Akron, O.

The Operations of this Factory require, and utilize, more than 75 Acres of Floor Space, and The B. F. Goodrich Co. frequently employs more than 15,000 people.

Made as always, —the same reliable Construction, the same dependable Service—without anything whatever taken out of Quality, no matter what reductions in List-Price are ever made.

NO other Rubber Factory in the World buys so much Crude Rubber, manufacturing as it does more than 90,000,000 lbs. of Rubber Goods yearly.

It pays one-sixth of all the Taxes in the City of Akron, which City has 15 other Rubber Concerns, and more than 100,000 Population.

Some of its "White Anchor" Fire Hose, made way back in 1884 (30 years ago), is still doing good service, because of the Precision Principle and Quality Ambition that lie behind all Goodrich Co. products.

Every day in the year, on average, the operations of The B. F. Goodrich Co. result in its receiving more than 30,000 pieces of Mail, and more than 350 Telegrams.

Thus it makes 100 kinds of Rubber Hose, 11 kinds of Rubber Tubing, 8 kinds of Insulated and other wire, etc.

—60 Miles of Insulated Wire.
—14 Miles of Rubber Hose.
— 5 Miles of Rubber Belting.
—12,000 Battery Jars for Electric Cars, etc.
—Conveyor Belts that measure as much as five feet wide and weigh more than 3674 pounds each.
—A Hard Rubber Dept. that alone employs more than 500 men.

All this in addition to its other Departments and the 21 kinds of Rubber Tires it makes exclusive of the "Goodrich Safety" Tread Auto Tire.

THIS Volume of Rubber Buying, Manufacturing and Selling, with the corresponding reduction of Overhead Expense when divided over so many classes, is what gives to the Goodrich Factory the lowest Cost for Tire Manufacturing of the highest Grade.

The Responsibility to so many lines of Dealers and Consumers, in so many lines of Trade, is what makes it so zealous in guarding the Quality and Value of each Product that bears the Goodrich name—so slow to launch new things until thoroughly tested—so keen to make Success sure and continuous, rather than dramatic and transient.

And of all these Goodrich Products, that which best expresses the measure of our capacity; our Experience and Good-faith is the Goodrich Safety-Tread Tire.

It does this through giving the greatest Mileage and Resilience in the field, at the fairest Cost, per Mile, to Users.

WHEN you Test these Goodrich Safety-Tread Tires, and compare with others of considerably higher price, you will then understand our Pride in Goodrich Standards and Ideals.

—A pride which results in Goodrich Tires being made better each year than they have ever been, and improved with each month's output.

The Goodrich Safety-Tread Tire today gives more Mileage than our own (or any other) plain-Tread Tire, with only about 5% more Cost to us and about 5% more price to you than that of our Plain Tread.

This, in line with Goodrich Co. Policy—which is to base its charges only on its low Manufacturing Cost, no matter how much more price could be obtained for the greater efficiency it develops from same materials.

GOODRICH FAIR-LISTED TIRES

HEADLEY IS PROMOTED BY MAXWELL COMPANY

There have been many successes in the automobile industry; many have risen from mediocre positions to places of high authority and prestige since the inception of the motor car, but few there have been who, in the space of one short year, have climbed from the lowest rung of the sales ladder to a highly responsible post in the sales organization of one of the largest automobile manufacturers.

That is what James P. Headley, of the Maxwell, has done. A little over a year ago he became connected with the Maxwell organization as salesman in the state of Georgia and now he is announced as assistant sales supervisor of zone No. 2 of the Maxwell Motor Sales corporation. His territory covers all eastern states south of Washington, D. C., with twelve district men and several hundred dealers upon his sales staff.

Headley, who is a thoroughly experienced automobile man, is of southern birth and possesses those sterling qualities of frankness, squareness and loyalty that go so much toward making and holding friends of worthy products.

His record in Georgia and a part of South Carolina, in the face of the worst business depression this country has ever seen, is considered nothing short of phenomenal and it has served to bring to the attention of the big chiefs in Detroit the fact that in Headley they had a man capable of big work.

His old dealers are rejoicing with his friends in Atlanta that he is not taken entirely away from them, while his new lieutenants are congratulating themselves upon the possession of such a splendid man as their manager. His headquarters will still be in Atlanta, but his new work will keep him constantly upon the road.

In his appointment of C. P. Hennessey to fill the vacancy at the Atlanta warehouse, caused by his own promotion, Headley has given to this territory a man who has every quality to successfully succeed him. Hennessey is already well known and exceptionally well liked by the southern automobile trade both for his personality and his ability, and with the assistance

Headley and Hennessey have been spending several days together since the recent Detroit convention perfecting plans for the promotion of sales following the 1916 announcement, which, it is claimed, will cause another Maxwell sensation among the dealers and motorists.

DOBBS CO. IS GIVING NEW LIFE TO TIRES

Running its force overtime to keep up with the great demand made upon it to repair thousands of automobile tires, the Dobbs Tire Repair company, at 226 Peachtree street, is one of the busiest places along automobile row.

For eight years this company has been in the tire repair game, and has built up a large patronage among autoists in this section. The company is composed of three brothers—Messrs. J. M., W. A. and C. W. Dobbs—all of whom are expert workmen, and have had years of experience in repair and automobile work.

The company was the original vulcanizers for this section, and still maintain a large vulcanizing department, but of recent date it has taken on the new method of repairing tires—much after the fashion of the shoemaker, who puts a new sole on an old shoe. By taking a casing which has been rim cut and one with the tread worn away, it is a simple matter to stoutly stitch them together, thus taking the best of the two tires and make a new tire, which in many cases has given from two thousand to five thousand more miles of service. Since the company has inaugurated this method of re-soling tires it has been almost swamped with work.

The cost is very nominal, and in these times of economy the Dobbs Tire Repair company has found itself the friend of thousands of autoists who have looked to it to practically furnish them with new tires.

8 CADILLAC CARS IN LONG JOURNEY OF MILITARY MEN

Thirty-four days after leaving Chicago, and having covered about 2,500 miles of all kinds of roads, in good weather and bad, mostly bad, the Northwestern Military and Naval academy's fleet of eight Cadillac cars arrived in San Francisco, was welcomed by the mayor and officials of the Panama-Pacific exposition, and given a prominent camping ground inside the exposition.

The military cars, with about 50 cadets from the academy, in charge of Colonel R. P. Davidson, the commandant, and with Lieutenant E. G. Arnemann, U. S. A., official observer for the war department, left Chicago June 16. The start was made under favorable auspices, but the column almost immediately ran into rainy weather, which continued for nine days. Through all this time the cars ploughed gumbo, and camp was made almost every night in the rain. The task of pulling through the gumbo and climbing the steep hills of the west was a simple one for the eight-cylinder Cadillacs, five of this type being included in the column.

The column included an officers' reconnaissance car, equipped with special military rifles, map tables and map making instruments, a dictating machine, etc.; two "wireless" cars, a field kitchen, a hospital car, an armored car, mounting a rapid fire gun; a quartermaster's car, with rapid fire gun; and the balloon-destroyer car which is a veteran of 80,000 miles of road and field work, and the hero of the 1910 Glidden tour.

Colonel Davidson, the commandant of the academy, has been building up his motor car corps for a number of years, using Cadillac cars exclusively. Each summer he plans a tour that will demonstrate some new phase of the automobile's usefulness as an adjunct to an army in the field. The journey just successfully completed is the most difficult ever attempted by his corps, and more extended than any ever before undertaken by a number of military cars.

SAXON "SIX" WINS HILL CLIMB EVENT

More hill-climbing honors went to Saxon motor cars when a six-cylinder model of this make captured first prize at Stamford, Conn., making a mile seven-eighths of a mile lone, with a 15 to 16 per cent grade in the time of one minute two and one-fifth seconds.

Competing against the Saxon were five other cars, two of which were higher in price than the winner. The Saxon "Six" won with a comfortable margin, taking the lead early in the contest and holding it throughout the race. Other cars in the run included a Buick, Mercer, Ford and Stanley.

Along with information about this victory came word of another in a speedway race at Lafayette, Ind. On this occasion a Saxon roadster took first place in a five-mile speed contest, with another roadsters of the same make coming in second. One of the competing machines was the Cornelian which appeared at the 500-mile Indianapolis speedway race

GOODRICH COMPANY WILL GUIDE-POST LINCOLN HIGHWAY

The last leg of the Lincoln highway, stretching from Denver and Cheyenne west to the Pacific coast, is about to be guide-posted by the National Touring Bureau of the B. F. Goodrich company, in preparation for the great army of motorists who will take that route in their cars this summer to the exposition and California. It is estimated that some 75,000 cars carrying over 300,000 people will traverse the three big trans-continental routes to the Pacific coast during the next few months.

The Lincoln highway passes through Salt Lake City, crosses the desert to Carson City and then strikes into eastern California to Sacramento and San Francisco. The Goodrich touring bureau estimates that it will require more than 3,000 of their indestructible guide posts to cover this route, and that the cost to them will average full $15 for each post erected. A truck and crew will follow the route and place the blue and white enamel guide posts at spots which have already been selected.

The Goodrich guide posts will be erected on substantial metal posts which cannot be easily destroyed, and the signs themselves will be of indestructible material of such construction that it cannot be destroyed by shotgun, rifle or by the cattle of the plains. With more than 60,000 posts on over 70,000 miles of the most traveled highways in the country, the Goodrich touring bureau has had some trouble with vandalism and in some cases guide posts have been destroyed.

Acworth Wins.

Acworth, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—Acworth beat the fast Cartersville team in one of the most interesting games ever played on the local diamond. Up to the first half of the ninth inning Acworth was in the lead by a score of 11 to 5, when Cartersville rallied and made six runs, which tied the score. Acworth won the game in the last half of the ninth, when a runner on second stole third, the third baseman missed the ball on account of a wild throw after which the runner came home. Cartersville used five pitchers during the game.

MAXWELL DEALERS TO CONVENE HERE TUESDAY MORNING

Maxwell dealers from all over Georgia and South Carolina will assemble in Atlanta on next Tuesday, is the announcement made by C. P. Hennessy, district salesman in these two states.

Fully one hundred men who sell Maxwells will be in attendance at the meeting, which will be held at the large warrooms of the company at 141 Madison avenue. A banquet will be served the guests and afterward the new 1916 model will be unveiled for the first time.

Contracts will be perfected and selling plans outlined for the ensuing year. Great interest has already been manifested in the new Maxwell, which it is claimed contains many improvements and several refinements and additions in motor car construction, while the price is even lower than last year.

PAIGE DISTRIBUTOR SELLS 232 "SIXES" FOR JULY DELIVERY

Chicago's demand on the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company for July deliveries of the 1916 edition of the Paige Big Six totals 232 cars. That many buyers are now clamoring in the office of the Chicago distributor for immediate delivery and there is every indication that this selling pace will be greatly increased before the season is much further advanced.

"The Chicago situation is only one incident in the selling rush that set in immediately following our recent announcements," said Henry Krohn, sales manager of the Paige-Detroit Motor Car company. "We have been absolutely overwhelmed with orders, telegrams, telephone calls and visits from eager dealers. It is the biggest demand, the keenest and most insistent, in our history. The orders are for both our seven-passenger Big Six and our new model, the five-passenger Light Six.

"In view of this extraordinary brisk selling, we feel that we can justly claim to have two big hits on our hands."

SAXON CARS USE GOODYEAR TIRES IN ECONOMY TEST

It was a great occasion for Goodyear tires, as well as for Saxon Sixes, when Saxon dealers to the number of 103 last week left the Saxon plant at Detroit to conduct an economy test of gas and oil as they drove from the plant to their homes in various parts of the country. Every car in the test was Goodyear equipped.

In token of Saxon enthusiasm over Goodyear tires also the company made each dealer who participated a present of a Goodyear tire.

The test now is ended and the scores are being compiled and compared, so that the prizes put up by the company for best performances may be awarded. The editors of the home newspapers of the men in the test act as judges upon the arrival of the cars at destination, and unofficial reports are to the effect that the Goodyear equipment stood up finely throughout.

Adverse weather conditions were encountered from the beginning. The cars left Detroit in a shower, and after a driving rain that made many roads a sea of mud, so that the work cut out for tires was hard and unrelieved wherever pavements were lacking.

Some surprising official statements will shortly be forthcoming on the results of the oil and gas consumption, and a number of attractive prizes are to be distributed.

Good Fishing Story.

(From Argonaut.)

The late Justice Brewer was with a party of New York friends on a fishing trip in the Adirondacks, and around the campfire one evening the talk naturally ran on big fish. When it came his turn the jurist began, uncertain as to how he was going to come out: "We were fishing one time on the Grand Banks for—er—"

"Whales," somebody suggested.

A NEW LIGHT SIX $1095
Every Inch a PAIGE

HERE you see illustrated the new Paige Six "36." Here you see the latest addition to a distinguished line of cars—a true Paige every inch of it—a car built to realize an ideal—a car that must not and cannot be judged from the standpoint of its astounding price alone.

When we say that this new Paige Six "36," has been built to realize an ideal we are speaking accurate, literal truth.

From the very beginning it has been the unfaltering purpose and policy of the Paige Company to build high class, dependable motor cars.

It has been the purpose and policy of the Paige Company to achieve a Standard of Quality and Value—not merely a standard of Price.

If you happen to know an owner of our larger, seven-passenger Six "46," you know precisely what we mean when we speak of Value and Quality.

All of the careful manufacturing, all of the painstaking attention to detail, all of the sturdy, reliable qualities which characterize the larger Six and have made it a pre-eminent Six of the year will be found in this newer and smaller five-passenger Paige Six "36."

The New Paige Six "36" Is Here

We realize that there are a vast number of people who do not require a large seven-passenger car.

But all of these people want a "Six," for they know that this is the day of the "Six" in quality cars.

Furthermore, they want a "roomy" car—a luxurious car—a "smart" car—an economical car.

In a word, there is an enormous demand for just such a car as the new Paige Six "36"

Glance at the illustration on this page and you will see that—from the radiator to tire carrier—this car is a five-passenger reproduction of the larger Six "46."

This body design has proved to be a sensation of the year No amount of money could buy more graceful lines or smarter appearance.

Inside the car you will find a great, big, comfortable tonneau and a broad driver's seat with upholstery of genuine leather which means ease and freedom from crowding for all of the five passengers.

Like the larger Six "46" you will find this car equipped with the world-famous Gray & Davis starting and lighting system.

Like the larger Six "46" you will find this car equipped with cantilever springs which insure easy, comfortable riding no matter what the road conditions may be—a velvety acting cork insert multiple disc clutch—forced feed lubrication system and the unequaled Rayfield carburetor.

When you raise the hood of this car, you will see an accessible, powerful six cylinder motor—3"x5"—which is a crowning achievement in motor construction.

We might attempt to tell you about the performance of this remarkable power plant, but we much prefer to have you ride in the car and establish the facts for yourself.

Then, you will realize what true six-cylinder Flexibility and Power really mean.

For the first time, perhaps, you will experience the indescribable sensation of riding in a car that is practically throttle controlled—a car that travels smoothly at a slow walking pace or the speed of the winds without change from high gear.

Low First Cost "Upkeep" Expense

Best of all, this is a car that any man can afford to drive. The Six "36" weighs but 2600 pounds and is equipped with oversize 4-inch tires. With this car you can enjoy true six-cylinder motor comfort without the penalty of excessive "upkeep" expense.

Space will not permit us to name even one-half the surprisingly good features embodied in the latest Paige.

But—accept our assurance—there is a tremendous surprise in store for you when you first inspect this car.

Then—and only then—you will appreciate what a truly great achievement it represents.

Then, we predict, your first query will be—"How is it possible to build such a car for $1095?"

The evening was cooler than any for the proceeding week, the moon cast a sheen of light on the lake, Bush's orchestra furnished delightful dance music, and the young people made the most of it. Between dances there was the opportunity for a moonlight stroll in the park, or a canoe ride on moonlit lake, and the participants were loath to leave when the last number was danced.

HOW MANY PERSONS ARE YOU?

The Strange Mental Cloud Which Came to Befog Holt, Whose Daring Attack on J. Pierpont Morgan Startled the World, Has Its Parallel in Many Persons, Who, Like "Alice," Are Victims of Weird and Abnormal Illusions

BY DELIA AUSTRIAN.

WITH the exception of the fictitious Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, have you ever really heard of a person having two or three different selves all wrapped and veiled in one? There are people of such nature, and at times, for reasons physical, psychic, or both, the individual breaks down and the different personalities reveal themselves.

One of the best-known cases on record is Madame "B," Dr. Charcot's famous patient. She had two distinct personalities, each with different tastes and qualities, that were as opposite as if they belonged to two different persons.

Dumas, the great modern pathological psychologist, has had a number of such patients. An interesting case is that of a woman who under the control of one personality is a devoted and loving mother. Under the control of another she takes no interest in her offspring, and even displays dislike for them.

In this same category of psychological analysis is the case of Frank Holt and Erich Muenter. Undoubtedly in this case there was one individual with two or even three distinct personalities.

Holt's a Triple Personality.

Erich Muenter was a German who, after receiving his education in high school and gymnasium, came to the United States and settled in Chicago in 1890. He was graduated from the University of Chicago in 1890 and taught German first in Chicago and later at the University of Kansas. He married in 1902 and then went to teach at Harvard University. A baby was born to the couple in April, 1906, and Mrs. Muenter died mysteriously ten days later. Muenter was supposed to have poisoned his wife, and the Cambridge police formally accused him of murder.

When Muenter disappeared Holt appeared. He is said to have lived in Mexico as a stenographer and translator of German and Spanish in 1906. He also taught German in Guthrie, Okla. Two years later he entered the polytechnic college at Fort Worth, Texas, and was graduated in 1909. During the years 1909 and 1910 he was a member of the faculty of the universities of Oklahoma and Vanderbilt. He attended Cornell, and was to have taught in a Southern Methodist university at Dallas, Texas.

Muenter's career and dramatic suicide revealed him as a criminal of triple personality. To his friends and college associates he appeared as a mild-mannered scholar interested in his profession and having an unusual talent for languages.

Cure Possible by Hypnosis.

To those who knew him more intimately he appeared as a mystic absorbed in sex problems and questions of the soul. To his first wife's family and some of his most intimate friends Muenter appeared as a murderer. He was that cold-blooded type of man who could sit on the porch smoking a pipe while his wife and baby were inside asphyxiated by gas.

A thorough investigation of the records made by modern psychologists shows that these cases of multiple personality are much more frequent than one imagines. One of these we will call "the case of Alice." Alice developed four personalities, as the poses on this page show. Look at these illustrations, if you please, carefully. They are an important part of the story.

The three young women are Alice, Bertha and Carrie. All three girls look alike and are dressed just alike because at one time there was only one girl called Alice, whom the models portray under different characters.

All went well until about two years ago, when Bertha and Carrie grew tired of being hidden from the world and friends under the guise of Alice. Until then Alice was a happy, care-free girl of 14. There was nothing unusual about this girl excepting that she had a great many friends because of her happy disposition and charming manner. Her time was divided between her studies and her friends. Alice was extremely precocious and was deep in her work in high school preparing for college when her health became impaired.

Meets Her Other Selves.

Neither she nor her mother gave any thought to her condition beyond observing that she was pale and nervous. Had it not been for the fact that in looking into the mirror one day she saw another girl as happy as she had been sullen, she might never have known about her second personality. Alice forgot this incident, only to recall it a few weeks later when she found herself in lively conversation with this same girl she had first met in the mirror. They were no longer on mere bowing terms, but good pals, and they were calling each other Alice and Bertha. Alice liked Bertha much better than she ever imagined she would and looked at her as a friend instead of in the light of a rival.

The two girls went further than flirting with each other in the mirror. They took long walks together, wrote confidential letters and confided their love affairs to each other. When they did not see each other they carried on their friendship by correspondence. All went well until Alice discovered that her friend was getting more attention and had more beaux. It was then and only then that Bertha was looked upon by Alice as a dangerous rival.

At the end of a three months' acquaintance they seldom met without quarreling, and Alice never let the slightest occasion pass without writing some spiteful letter to her erstwhile friend. Sometimes Bertha let them pass unnoticed, but more often she answered coldly and politely, doing all she could to defend herself in a simple but determined fashion.

Alice also tried to wear an air of assumed politeness, but usually her frank disposition got the better and she either snubbed her friend or challenged her to an open quarrel. When her words were not sharp enough she made faces at the other girl and even pinched her. Sometimes she actually mailed spiteful letters, and with glee awaited their arrival.

When not actually trying to taunt the other girl she tried her level best to make her jealous by assuming a coquettish and hilarious manner. She wore her smartest gowns, danced and sang and made every effort to be light-hearted and indifferent. It worked like a charm for a while and she thought that she had succeeded in making Bertha jealous, when it suddenly dawned on her that Alice annoyed her no less than Bertha. She was in too deep and serious a mood to enjoy Alice's whims and vagaries any more than she did Bertha's blunt and frank way. She was neither of these two now and called herself Carrie.

Though she was in too downcast and sullen a mood to quarrel with them, she let them know by words and action that she did not want much to do with either girl. Finally she became so listless that, though they appeared to her from time to time, she paid little heed to their coming and going. She left school, refused to read and be among her friends. Her chief recreation consisted of spending hours walking along the beach or in the woods.

The other two personalities came and went, but they had no existence for her. The family doctor pronounced the case one of strong melancholia, but he had little to say about the two other vague personalities that came and went and seemed to take possession of Alice from time to time.

Suddenly Alice grew desperately ill and her mother packed her up and hurried to Europe to consult some of the best specialists in England. A half-dozen or more nerve specialists were agreed that her case was a complete nervous breakdown, commonly called hysteria.

Becomes Ideal Patient.

The explanation of the case was told and retold, but not one of these eminent physicians made a permanent cure, in spite of the fact that they gave her rest cures and tried to treat her with cold water cures and hypnotism.

The mother then took Alice to Paris and her case seemed as hopeless until she met the great pathological psychologist George Dumas. He listened to her story patiently and after studying her movements he undertook to treat her by hypnotism. At first the work was slow but comparatively easy, for Alice was docile and frank in her dealings. When she was happy and contented she let her condition be known, and she made no effort to conceal the fact when she was blue and downcast.

When Bertha appeared and tried to lord it over Alice the case was difficult, but through the aid of hypnotism Dumas managed to check Bertha from getting the better of Alice and him. It was only when Alice disappeared from the stage completely and Bertha took complete control that the doctor was more baffled and found his work in hypnotism increase tenfold. Bertha was so "artfully artless" that it sometimes took weeks before Dumas brought her under hypnotic control.

He had no sooner built his hopes than another personality appeared whom he had never seen before. It was Alice's old friend Carrie, who was as sullen and somber as Bertha was subtle and gay. Dumas' work in hypnotism seemed to have no effect on her until Alice reappeared and made a desperate effort to worry and to antagonize Carrie.

Blending Four Personalities.

This was the doctor's chance to work quick and effectually. He went to work and tried to blend the two characters into one. At the end of two months the two girls were blended into one with certain definite qualities of each.

The new guest was far less morose than Carrie and less light-hearted than Alice. For more than a month the new girl seemed to control the situation, when Bertha appeared and tried to lord it over the new girl as she had done over Alice. The girl of the doctor's making, who was called Dora, for want of a better name, first paid no attention to her rival. Dr. Dumas, appreciating the honest effort Dora was making to control her rival, came to her aid and started hypnotizing Bertha as he had Carrie. He did not know if he had hypnotized her or wiped her out of existence, but in less than a month's time Bertha disappeared, leaving no bad effects behind. He did not know if the girl that remained was to be called Alice, Bertha, Carrie or Dora, or if she was the blending of all four personalities, but she was the perfectly natural and normal girl Alice was before she was attacked by the other personalities.

Alice as her normal self.

One day Alice looked in the mirror and discovered Bertha, her second personality.

Alice is saved through hypnotism, by which all "personalities" have to be treated.

Carrie appears and, as a third personality, is too downcast to notice Alice and Bertha.

Alice quarrels with Bertha and tears up friendly letters she has written her.

Do Best Soldiers Have Dual Personality?

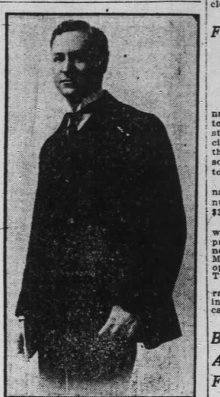
MILITARY observers and surgeons attached to the great armies now warring in Europe agree that soldiers everywhere are showing the effects of a strange phenomenon called the "hypnosis of battle." It is said that the soldier when in this state is controlled by his brutish personality and glories in killing. This state lasts two or three days at a time, sometimes longer. Then consciousness suddenly returns, usually accompanied by complete exhaustion.

While in the power of this peculiar mental control the soldier will not hesitate to occupy the most dangerous positions, and in a dull, stubborn manner will engage in charges and counter-charges so daring that they may be classed as reckless. It is found that often the soldier when obsessed with this personality of battle appears to suffer from hallucinatory delirium.

Authorities predict that this "spirit of Mars" will be a strong factor in determining the final outcome of the great struggle.

Expert Advertising Man Goes With Boston Company

I. J. Cassett, for Three Years With M. Rich & Bros. Co., Leaves Today to Accept Position With Shepard Norwell Company.



I. J. CASSETT.

After directing the advertising for the store of M. Rich & Bros. company for the past three years, I. J. Cassett leaves Atlanta today to take a similar position with the Shepard Norwell company, of Boston, one of the largest department houses of the "Hub" city.

While his selection by the Boston company to so responsible a position is a distinct compliment to Mr. Cassett and to the earnest and progressive methods he employs in his advertising work, yet his going will bring regret to the scores of strong and close friends he has made during his stay in this city.

Mr. Cassett has been selected by the Shepard Norwell company largely because the ideas he has evolved and developed in his work with the Atlanta house are so close in harmony with the ideas of the Boston concern. Mr. Cassett declares that all the better stores of the country are working along identical lines, and that regardless of size any concern to prosper as it should must render good service to its customers and in other ways meet their demands made upon the up-to-date merchants of the country.

"Each store must always have on hand," says Mr. Cassett, "ample stocks of fresh, clean merchandise; it must observe the return privilege or money-back policy on purchases not satisfactory, and in every other way render a full measure of satisfaction with each transaction.

"The day of haphazard methods is past. The modern department store must follow set merchandising laws. To be successful it is necessary to quit playing luck against law. Successful stores have learned that in order to succeed they must always have the right merchandise at the right time at the right price. They know, too, that they must have a store policy that insures satisfaction to every customer. After it has formulated its policies, trained its salespeople and assembled its merchandise, it is the business of the advertising manager to interpret this merchandise and policy to the store's customers."

It was the successful practicing of this policy while handling the advertising at the Rich store that brought him to the attention of Boston's big department store.

Mr. Cassett has impressed all who have come in contact with him during his three years' stay in Atlanta as that he is not only an expert in the advertising game, but a close student of those things which perfect him in his work, and withal a most genial and clever gentleman.

ADKINS TAKES CHARGE OF HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Dr. W. N. Adkins will become chief medical inspector of the health department of the city schools August 1, succeeding Dr. Robert G. Stephens, head of the medical inspection department, as abolished Thursday by the Aldine Chambers resolution adopted by the board of education. Members of the board have been in conference with Dr. Adkins, who is a specialist in the diseases of children, and he has announced that he will accept the position, giving his entire time to the health of Atlanta's school children.

Dr. Adkins is an Atlantan and a graduate of the Atlanta Medical college, class of 1905. The next seven years he spent as an attache of the several hospitals in New York which treat children's diseases exclusively. Since 1912 Dr. Adkins has practiced his specialty in Atlanta. He was also for several years physician for the Southern Bell telephone system.

Under the plan of the reorganized department of medical inspection, as called for in the Chambers resolution, Dr. Adkins will give all his time to the attention of the school children's health, subject to the rights of the usual vacation period. He will maintain an office for the keeping of records and will also work out, in conjunction with the city's department of health, means and methods to combat such contagious diseases as might appear among children of this locality. His salary will be $1,800 per annum.

Dr. Adkins will be assisted by three medical assistants and five nurses. The medical assistants, who are to receive $300 per year each, will be employed by the board only at such times as they may be needed. The five nurses, who will receive salaries of $750 a year, are to be in readiness to answer calls whenever needed during the school year.

"We are sorry to part with Dr. Stephens, the former head," said Major Quinn, chairman of the board of education. "He has given excellent service."

Dr. Stephens stated that he did not feel that he could forsake his private practice, as the present reorganization of the school health department would require him to do. He has been in charge of the chief medical examiner's office for the past five years, and has brought the system of health supervision of the 25,000 Atlanta school children to its present point of excellence.

TALLEST PRISONERS ON RECORD APPEAR BEFORE RECORDER

Tom and Johnny McIntyre are farmers living west of Atlanta. They came to the city Friday to sell their produce, and, after getting pretty well "liquored up," it is alleged, were taken in custody by a limb of the law and Saturday afternoon haled before Recorder Johnson and fined $3.75 each.

Tom and Johnny were both exactly seven feet tall, and in getting on the witness stand they were forced to stoop to keep the blades of the electric fan over the judge's bench from hitting them in the head.

AGOGAS PLAY LINDALE IN LINDALE SATURDAY

The Agoga team, winners of the pennant in the Sunday School league, will go to Lindale, Ga., next Saturday, where they will hook up with the fast Lindale Cotton Mills team. It is expected that this game will be a hard fought battle from the start, as reports emanating from Lindale state that the team is one of the fastest in north Georgia, having been winning all games this season with ease. The ability of the Agogas is well known, they having lost only one and won twelve games against local amateur teams.

GORDON WINS PENNANT.

By defeating Second Baptist Saturday, 10 to 4, Gordon won the pennant in the Junior Sunday School league. The feature of the game Saturday was the hitting of Boswell. In the second inning, with the bases crowded, he drove a hard liner to deep left for the circuit.

GEORGIA POWER WINS ELECTRIC PENNANT

Splitting even in the double-bill with the Southern Bell nine at Ponce de Leon Saturday, the Georgia Railway and Power company won the pennant in the Electric league. By winning the first game they cinched the gonfalon. The score of the first game was 7 to 5, while the second was 5 to 3.

The two games were featured by the hitting of Griffin for the winners, who connected for seven safe hits in eight times at the bat. In the first inning of the first game the Bell boys started strong, making three runs. However, after the Georgia team had made two in the first and second and one in the third, the game was not long in doubt, as Bagwell pitched superb ball, and was not in much danger during the remainder of the game.

The second game was a pretty pitchers' battle between Jim Senter, of Tech fame, for the Bell team, and Driver, recently secured by many the best amateur pitcher in the city. The Bell boys won the game in the eighth inning. They were one run behind at the start of this inning, but after Burr had driven one to deep left for the circuit, tying the count, they got next to Driver and sent two more men over.

League Season Successful.

The games Saturday wound up the 1915 schedule of the league, and which is incidentally the first season this league has been in organization. The league enjoyed a very successful season, and the class of ball played was as good as has ever been played in Atlanta. Every team in the league has fought hard for every game, and with the exception of one game, has played every time they were scheduled.

Although after the first three or four games had been played, it became apparent that the race for the pennant lay between the Southern Bell and the Georgia Power, the other teams did not quit, but continued to play hard for every game, a thing which the other amateur leagues in the city would do well to copy. In no instance can a forfeited game be traced to any of the Electric league teams.

Every manager in the league declares that they will be right back next year, and that the winners this season will have to travel at a much livelier gait in order to cop the pennant. They are also backing the Georgia nine to capture the city series.

The box scores of the two games played Saturday are:

S. V. D. AND ATLANTA TELEPHONE BREAK EVEN.

S. V. D. and Atlanta Telephone finished the season by splitting a double-header Saturday afternoon, Atlanta Telephone winning the first, 12 to 10, while S. V. D. copped the second, 10 to 5. This leaves the two teams tied for third place in the Electric league, which, although this was its first season, played the fastest ball in the city.

The first game was a slugging match and was anybody's game until the last man was out. McConnell and Robertson starred with the stick in this game, McConnell won the game in the seventh by knocking a three-banger with the bases full.

The second game was a walk-over for S. V. D., as they hit Golden to all corners of the lot, while Liddell held the slugging "hello girls" safe. McConnell was the only man who could hit him consistently. Both teams fielded well in the game.

The hitting of McConnell, of the Telephone team, was the feature of the double bill, he the first game he got a homer, triple, a double and a single out of four trips to the pan, while in the second he bingled safely four times in an equal number of times at bat. Two of these were extra base wallops, one being a homer and the other a triple.

BARACA LEAGUE ENDS

At a meeting of the Baraca Sunday School league Thursday night it was decided to close the season, in view of the fact that the Agoga team had won the pennant, regardless of how the other two games that were due to be played panned out.

The Agoga team, which is easily one of the best in amateur ball, had little difficulty in winning the gonfalon. Throughout the season they suffered only one defeat, while on twelve occasions they took the scalp of opposing clubs.

Grant Park and Oakland City tied for second place, but whether this tie will be played off is not known. It was not decided at the meeting Thursday night.

This is the first time in the history of the Baraca league that all teams that started the season have played throughout.

The Agoga team is anxious for the city series to start, and their manager, Tomlinson, declares that the winners in the other league will have to hustle to beat them out.

The way the teams stood at the close of the season is:

JACKSON HILL DOWNS LEAGUE LEADERS.

Jackson Hill won a hard-fought game from the Atoga Feds, Saturday by the close count of 3 to 2. The game was nip and tuck from the start, and the outcome always was in doubt. The Feds were crippled by the absence of their regular pitcher, who was out of the city. Jackson Hill played good ball, and seemed to hit at the right time, a thing that the Feds were unable to do.

HOLSTEIN MILK Health Vitality Nutrition

Certified Holstein Milk Will Make Your Baby Strong and Plump

This is not a condensed milk or patented food. Holstein milk is the milk of the Holstein breed of cow—the largest, strongest and mildest of all dairy animals. This particular kind of milk is very different from any other milk and far superior in body-building qualities. Besides it is perfectly easy to digest, as easy as mother's milk. If you will try Holstein milk you will probably find it just the food your baby needs, especially if the little one seems improperly nourished.

The Kangaroo Court

How White Prisoners in Fulton County Jail Make and Enforce Their Own Law.

By Wm. E. Arnaud,
(Of the Atlanta Bar.)

The judge gravely took his seat upon the top of a galvanized garbage can; around him stood the officers of court. Addressing one of them, the judge said:

"Mr. Clerk, has any fresh meat arrived within this jurisdiction since the court last convened?"

"Yes, your honor," responded the clerk, "a package was delivered last night and is now asleep."

The sheriff and a deputy stepped into one of the cells adjoining the corridor on either side and brought forth the prisoner, who had been put into jail the night before.

"What have you to say to this charge? What is your plea—guilty or not guilty?" demands the judge of the prisoner, who stands mutely before the garbage can bar of justice.

The prisoner, having had previous court experience, calmly answers, "Guilty, your honor."

Without Inmates' Consent.

"Very well, I will fine you fifty cents for entering these premises without the inmates' consent," announces the judge.

"Mr. Sheriff, you will see to it that the prisoner pays the fine instanter to the clerk, after which allow him the freedom of the fourth floor east."

This is an average trial in the Kangaroo court, conducted by white prisoners in the Fulton county jail, under laws established by custom and of their own making.

After court adjourned I questioned the prisoner who had just acted as judge concerning the origin and nature of the Kangaroo court. He talked very entertainingly and was now and then interrupted by some fellow prisoners who would amplify a statement by some of his own experience.

"No, I don't know where the Kangaroo court got its name," answered Judge ——. "I have been in jail in twenty-two states and in every jail of any size that amounted to anything there was some kind of a Kangaroo court. The prisoners themselves run these different courts and the rules are about the same everywhere I have been."

At this point one of the prisoners took down from the bars of the cell a cardboard used by a local laundry on the inside of laundered negligee shirts, on which was written, in lead pencil, on the reverse side from that bearing the laundry's advertisement, the following rules of self-government:

The Prisoners' Code.

THE KANGAROO COART RULES AND REGULETION FOR 4TH EAST.

3d any one telling a lye about him not having any monney to pay a fine and later we find out he has will Be fined or santenced to hard labor, without a fine.

4th Enternates must take a Bath 2st a Week.

5th No unnecessary talking after 10 P. M.

8th No fussing quarling or fighting alowed at any time.

9th any one caught Stealing property of Kangaroo coart will Be fined.

10th cells must Be swept out 2 Per day.

12th any one cought blabbing to the Jailer will Be fined.

13th no Swaring or Smoking in coart.

14th no noises aloud from 10 P. M. tell 6 a. m.

Upon my promise to return in its place a typewritten copy, I was allowed to take the prisoners' code away with me.

The officers of court are a judge, clerk, sheriff and deputies, solicitor or prosecuting attorney. Certain prisoners are selected as—defending attorneys, so that a defendant in the Kangaroo court can have his choice of counsel to represent him. Sometimes it is possible to secure the services of a real lawyer. All officers are elected by vote for the term of their confinement, or until they are sent elsewhere to serve sentences. Trial by jury is an inherent right in the Kangaroo court. The defendant may, if he desires to do so, select a jury from among his fellows, and in this way he is protected from the tyranny of a judge who might bear a grudge against the defendant.

The Judge's Record.

Judge —— told me that he had served as judge for three months, but that he had been promoted and would most likely leave next day to take up other duties at the state prison farm, for a period of five years.

"You can mention my name if you like," he said, "but I would rather that you would not say that I was found guilty of highway robbery."

The clerk of the court also acts as treasurer, and is required to make regular reports to show the amount of fines collected and the disbursements. He is put under bond for the faithful discharge of his duties, but it often happens that his sureties are released from jail before the clerk gains his freedom. In this event, the sureties are said to have "skipped their bond."

The fines imposed are small, because the prisoners rarely have much money. For instance, spitting on the floor usually draws a fine of 5 cents per spit. Swearing is punished according to the degree of profanity used.

If a prisoner cannot pay a fine he is given work to do—sweeping, cleaning, etc. Whipping is prohibited by the Fulton sheriff, and, although so many "licks" is prescribed as a punishment under Kangaroo law for certain offenses, this form of punishment is rarely imposed, even in secret.

"What becomes of the money collected as fines?" I asked.

"That makes up a common fund for our general expense," answered a prisoner. "We buy tobacco, toilet soap, soft drinks, candies—because the electric lights are put out early—writing paper, stamps and other little things. Sometimes a fellow is mighty glad to be able to write to the home folks.

"See that tin cup hanging on that pot? Well, tobacco is kept in that, so that every time a fellow wants to smoke he won't have to ask the treasurer for tobacco.

"There's another thing we buy, and everybody uses—that is a daily newspaper. Ain't those Germans some scrappers? But none of them in the trenches are 'dug in' any tighter than we are right here."

Here Judge —— cut in on the conversation, to say that the residents in his bailiwick had "been an all fired good" lately that he had not had much chance to impose fines, and, therefore, the treasury was getting mighty low, and the tin cup didn't have much to—Jacob left in it. "Thanks, that'll help some."

Book Reviews in Tabloid

THE COUNTRY TOWN SUNDAY SCHOOL.

The author, Gus C. Edwards, has written an interesting little story on the Baptist Sunday school at Clarkesville, a little north Georgia town which has a population of less than one thousand, and which is noted for its location and beautiful scenery, being in the shadow of the Blue Ridge mountains. But it is of the Sunday school the author writes, and in a most interesting manner he tells of the success of this Sunday school under his leadership, which in a short while numbered 100 scholars. The table of contents shows the foundation of this successful school—the most practical being Co-operation, another is Diplomacy, etc.

This little volume is well worth reading and should be in every Sunday school library, city or town, for it shows a superintendent what can be done to promote the success of his school if he will only get the teachers and scholars interested along the right lines. (Legal Publishing company, Clarkesville, Ga.)

HUDSON RIVER.

The Hudson River Today and Yesterday. By Arthur P. Abbott. The author says his object in writing a series of these little books is to tell "truthful stories" about our nation's past, which he has done in a most striking and interesting style. Mr. Abbott says with reference to this volume, "I have chosen the Hudson River valley, which is not only the scenic American Rhine, but the very shrine of American history. For no war has been and in all human probability will ever be fought with more beneficial results to the nations of the earth than that of the American revolution."

HOUGHTON-MIFFLIN COMPANY.

Ralph Waldo Emerson. By Oscar W. Firkins. Based on Emerson's recently published journals, this new biography throws a flood of light on his life and writings, and is as readable as it is fresh and authoritative.

The Divine Mystery. A study of the Christian elements in the pre-Christian religions, by the author of "The New Word," is a notable book on an interesting subject.

The Unrobbed Mind. By Dr. Herbert J. Hall. A sensible, optimistic and interesting book by the famous nerve specialist—a worthy addition to the little group whose aim is to point out the way to right living.

Writing an Advertisement. By S. Roland Hall. There have been many books on advertising, but this one touches upon a most important phase of advertising—the preparation of copy.

HARPER & BROS.

Holman Day, having finished his new novel, "The Land Leaper" (which will be reviewed at an early date), has gone for a fishing trip in the Maine woods. Mr. Day is not only a lover of the water, but of the forest. His novels have all resulted from one or the other, among them "King Spruce," "The Red Lane," "The Skipper and the Skipped" and "Squire Phin." "The Land Loper" is a forest tale.

A Swedish translation of "The Story of the Other Wise Man," by Henry Van Dyke, has just been published in Stockholm. This story has been published in numerous languages, and the publishers will soon bring it out attractively bound in silk.

Ella Frances Lynch, author of "Educating the Child at Home," is just making her yearly change from her school at Atlantic City to her classes in the Adirondacks. She intends this summer to make certain tests to discover whether city children or country children have the greater instinctive appreciation of poetry and good prose.

Booth Tarkington's new novel, "The Turmoil," will shortly make its appearance in Spanish. The story is to appear serially in El Norte Americano, a Spanish-American paper.

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY.

Williford I. King's "The Wealth and Income of the People of the United States," published in June, is a very strong volume. Among the questions asked and argued are why are some of the people very rich, others very poor? If wealth and income were more equally divided, could one live in luxury? Are we coming more and more under the domination of private corporations? What are the signs of the future?

Another June book of special interest is "The Japanese Problem in the United States," by Professor H. A. Mills. This is a volume of about three hundred pages, embodying concisely the conclusions at which Professor Mills arrived

The Bryce "Report on Alleged German Atrocities" is apparently to take the place as one of the historical documents of permanent value bearing upon the European war. The report has already been published in permanent form.

"A Far Country" is considered by Samuel Hopkins Adams, the well-known novelist, "the finest thing that Churchill has done, both in conception and execution. Mr. Adams continues: "If I wished to give an intelligent foreigner a clear conception of the struggle of new against old, of the spiritual against the material, in our America, I should put 'A Far Country' into his hands and bid him leave the essayists and the theorizing doctors on their dusty shelves."

William Lyon Phelps says of the Far Country that "it is an interesting record of certain phases of our national life well worth reading."

St. John G. Ervine, the new Irish author of "Alice and a Family," and "Mrs. Martin's Man." Mr. Ervine is a protege of Bernard Shaw. "Like Dickens, he has chosen to become the interpreter of the common people. He writes in a most enthusiastic way of the peasant class in Ireland and also of the laboring class in Belfast and London," says Mr. Shaw.

There is no doubt of Mr. Ervine's humor—he makes his characters so perfectly human that they become men and women, and like Dickens' characters, you do not forget them.

Jack London is receiving the approval of his writer friends over his last book, "The Scarlet Plague," which is considered by some as the best. While the story is brief, you do not lose interest in it at any time.

A Swedish translation of "The Story of the Other Wise Man," by Henry Van Dyke, has just been published in Stockholm. This story has been published in numerous languages, and the publishers will soon bring it out attractively bound in silk.

Ella Frances Lynch, author of "Educating the Child at Home," is just making her yearly change from her school at Atlantic City to her classes in the Adirondacks. She intends this summer to make certain tests to discover whether city children or country children have the greater instinctive appreciation of poetry and good prose.

Booth Tarkington's new novel, "The Turmoil," will shortly make its appearance in Spanish. The story is to appear serially in El Norte Americano, a Spanish-American paper.

A recent announcement that a new edition of Katrina Trask "In the Vanguard" had been asked for proves that this great peace play has been in greater demand since the war began than before. The Trask memorial at Saratoga Springs has been unveiled. The author's new book, "The Mighty and the Lowly," is to be published this month—it is said the volume deals with the social and ethical problem.

LITERARY NOTES.

Agnest and Edgerton Castle, authors of "The Haunted Heart," are both engaged in the work of the war committee in London. They are working on a new novel, which will be a romance of the present war, and they have decided on the title, "The Hope of the Family."

Lucy Pratt, author of "Felix Tells It," is very busy with a new story which will follow the adventures of the delightful little hero in the above book.

Marianna Wheeler, author of "The Young Mother's Handbook," is spending her summer at Conway, Mass. Her home is an old farmhouse which she bought and has made very attractive.

Rex Beach has returned from his Cuban trip. He chartered a yacht and had a great deal of pleasure yachting and catching tarpon.

Margaret Deland is at her summer home in Kennebunkport, Maine, and is busy finishing a new book, the first long novel since "The Iron Woman," which will be published in a few months.

Rear Admiral French E. Chadwick, who has written the book entitled "The American Navy," was Admiral Sampson's chief of staff during the war with Spain, and is one of the most influential friends of the navy.

Dr. Charles A. Eastman, author of "The Indian of Today" is a full-blooded Sioux Indian, a graduate of Dartmouth, and a well known medical practitioner, as well as author and lecturer on Indian topics. Dr. Eastman's Indian name is Ohiyesa and he is the son of a chief of the tribe.

Isaac Sharpless, author of "The American College," is the president of Haverford college, an educator of distinction, and a writer upon historical subjects.

Oswald Ryan, author of "Municipal Freedom, winner of the Baldwin prize in 1910 by the National Municipal league for an essay on "The Commission Plan of City Government," is now a lawyer in Indiana.

Professor Leon Kellner, author of "American Literature," and other interestinb and widely-read books on literature, is professor of English literature in the University of Czernowitz, Austria.

Basil King, the popular author, is spending the summer in Europe. It is rumored that a new novel will be announced this fall.

"The Master Scientist," by an unknown Atlanta author, is being warmly received, not only by Atlantans, but is being widely read and discussed. Foote & Davies, of Atlanta, are the publishers.

A Letter From Henry Sydnor Harrison.

About two months ago Houghton Mifflin company sent to Henry Sydnor Harrison, who is doing relief work in France, a package of reviews of "Angela's Business," the first Mr. Harrison had seen, although the book was published in March. His letter of acknowledgment, which reached Boston a few days ago, says:

"The package of reviews, advertisements and other Angela stuff, dated Boston, May 3, was handed to me today at the Belgian farm where we are billeted just now, with refugees for steady company and swarms of Tommies as our comrades for a night. If this letter seems incoherent, inconsequential, etc., be indulgent, for I am trying to write seated on the floor of my 'bus, as ambuiances are known in the trade, with half a dozen idle fellow chauffeurs sprawling all over me, sipping red wine, of which the French general kindly furnishes us free kegs."

Warsaw's Many Rulers.

(From The Chicago Journal.)

No city in Europe has known so many changes of masters as Warsaw, which the Russians now hold. Founded about the year 950, it was the capital of the independent kingdom of Mazovia until the fifteenth century, when it was annexed by Poland. In the seventeenth century its possession was contended for by Sweden, Russia, Austria and Brandenberg, until, in 1764, Russia practically annexed it. In 1795 the city was handed over to Prussia, but Napoleon occupied it in 1806, and at the peace of Tilsit, Warsaw was proclaimed an independent duchy. In 1809 the Austrians seized the city, but lost it again, and after another brief spell of independence the city passed finally to Russia in 1813.

Georgia's General Assembly Will Appear in "Movies"

This picture will be used as part of the motion picture on Georgia, which the Georgia Chamber of Commerce is now building, and it will follow the views of the state capitol building.

In the front of the picture made Thursday appears Governor Harris, with President Persons, of the senate, on one side, and Speaker Burwell of the house, on the other. They marched down the capitol steps with the senate and house immediately following, and the picture was taken at such close range that all of the individuals in the picture will be easily recognized.

Arrangements had been made for the picture both in the senate and house. In the house the matter was handled by Representative Morton Turner, and Mr. A. J. Hodges, both of Brooke county, and in the senate by Senator John D. Walker.

The view taken required about 200 feet of motion picture, and will make a very pleasing and interesting section of the Georgia film.

This feature will be used as part of the many reels of picture taken in all parts of the state and which are to advertise Georgia in all sections of the country. Hundreds of wide awake citizens are writing letters to the Georgia Chamber of Commerce commending this organization for undertaking this mode of assisting the farming and manufacturing interests of the state and many of them have suggested many valuable features which will be embodied in the film.

Among the many prominent Georgians assisting in the preparation of the film are C. B. Clark, cashier of the Citizens Bank of Savannah; J. S. Stewart, member of the faculty of the University of Georgia; F. Lombard Brinson, secretary of the Merchants and Manufacturers' association of Augusta; M. L. McNeel, of the McNeel Marble company, Marietta; Professor John R. Fain, member of the faculty of the State College of Agriculture; Rufus H. Brown, cashier of the Chamberga Railroad bank, Augusta; W. A. Shackelford, editor of The Oglethorpe Echo, Lexington; Walter Cowart, secretary of the board of trade, Union City; W. N. Nixon, editor of The Tyrone Enterprise, Newnan; Lamar Cloud, attorney at law, Cordele; R. Carter, secretary of the Toccoa Board of Trade; J. F. Shannon, president of the Chamberga Commerce, Commerce, and J. A. Perry, editor of The LaGrange Reporter.

STATUS OF COTTON STIRRING BRITAIN

London, July 24.—The newspaper agitation to have cotton declared contraband continues unabated, but the foreign office has given no sign of receding from its position.

Virtually all the cargoes Great Britain agreed to purchase under the cotton agreement have been disposed of, so that hereafter cotton cargoes will be seized if it is suspected they are destined for a nation at war with Great Britain, but ultimately they will be paid for by the government. According to a representative of cotton interests here this procedure is much preferable to the more regular action of declaring cotton contraband, as under the present system the shipper is certain of ultimate payment.

That the present system of preventing cotton from reaching the German market by invoking the order-in-council of March 11 is, aside from the question of its legality, not injurious to American cotton shippers, is held to be indicated by the latest figures of the board of trade on cotton imports and exports, which show the total for 1915 up to July 11 to be 3,772,258 bales, as compared with 2,237,779 for the normal year of 1913. Of this amount 3,118,357 bales came from the United States in 1915, while in 1913 only 1,663,116 came from America.

The cotton trade of England is now becoming almost normal, as the slump in the textile industries is almost compensated for by the increased use of cotton for explosives.

Government Urged to Act.

The Times and The Daily Mail again today urge the government to declare cotton contraband and to undertake the scheme for the purchase of the textile as outlined by The Times yesterday. This plan contemplated the purchase by the government from the southern cotton exchanges of the amount of cotton that would normally have gone to Germany and Austria-Hungary and of the cotton exports to Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, at the same time declaring cotton absolute contraband.

The Daily Graphic also complains of the inaction of the government on this question and says the matter is becoming a grave danger to the country, as unless something is done before the new cotton crop is available Germany will be able to get all the cotton she requires.

The Daily Mail in an editorial says: "It will be a gross public scandal if this matter is not dealt with before parliament rises, to save our soldiers."

In an article dealing with dissatisfaction in Lancashire through the government placing restrictions upon the shipments of cotton yarns to neutral countries, The Times says:

"Rightly or wrongly the government believes cloth and cloth for aircraft has been getting through to Germany and undoubtedly a determined effort is now being made to stop the entry of any materials that are likely to assist the enemy."

Replying to newspapers and publicists who demand that cotton shall be made absolute contraband, regardless of the effect on neutral nations, The Weekly Nation says:

"Some such similar action united against us in active warfare or armed neutrality the whole civilized world a hundred years ago, even in the end dragging us into a dreary fight with the United States."

The Nation points out Great Britain protested against cotton being declared contraband during the Russo-Japanese war, and that in the declaration of London the British representatives insisted upon having cotton placed on the free list.

"The mere abrogation of this document," continues the paper, "would not satisfy neutrals or such interests as those of the American cotton states, which wish to know whether Britain's command of the seas is to justify her in making or unmaking international law as it suits her convenience of the moment."

The Nation considers, however, that if Germany diverted all cotton supplies for the manufacture of war munitions a new situation would have arisen, and the declaration of cotton as absolute contraband could be justified before the world; but even then the treatment of cotton destined for neutral states would remain to be considered, and The Nation advises critics to leave the decision to the foreign office, which has all the facts.

WARM FIGHTS EXPECTED OVER SENATE MEASURES

Busy Week Faced by Upper House of the Legislature.

A lively fight is looked for in the senate this week over the peddler bill introduced by Senator Persons. The peddler bill provides for an annual tax of $50 on each wagon that is used by a peddler.

While Senator Persons thinks his bill a very good measure, Senator Trammell and others do not agree with him. It is maintained by those who oppose the bill that the peddlers who go around through the country buying up produce to sell in the towns are a great blessing to the farmers. To tax such peddlers, it is said, would stop all the wagons and force the farmers to haul their own produce to the towns and cities.

When the senate convenes Monday morning the first measure to be taken up will be the house bill appropriating $16,000 for the rebuilding of the academic building of the state agricultural and mechanical college at Americus. Two amendments have been offered, one to cut the appropriation to $8,000 and the other to $10,000.

The next matter to be acted upon by the senate Monday will be a bill to secure a sufficient number of the Gober Form books to be exchanged for the old books now in use. The form books are to be distributed among the state-house officials.

When the senate takes up the burglar bill, introduced by Senator Eakes, another lively fight is looked for. The original bill made it a hanging offense for a burglar to burgle an occupied dwelling at night. The committee amended by making the penalty from five to thirty years. The present law is from five to twenty years.

The senate will not convene until 11 o'clock and the entire morning will probably be taken up with the bill to appropriate $16,000 for the agricultural college.

CAPITOL GOSSIP

By Ned McIntosh

BILL MAKES CHANGES IN UNIVERSITY TRUSTEES' TERMS.

A bill has been introduced in the senate by Senators Persons and Stovall whereby a change would be affected in the terms of members of the trustees of the University of Georgia. At present it is the law for three trustees to be appointed to oversee the business of each branch of the state university. Under the new bill, if enacted into law, the chairman of the board of trustees of the University of Georgia will designate three members from the board upon each of the boards of the branch colleges, but these branch boards will serve in rotation. No member of the board of trustees shall be designated and thus appointed upon the board of any branch college until he has previously served in succession upon each of the other branch boards for the term of two years." The purpose of the bill, which has been reported favorably by the committee on the University of Georgia, is to familiarize all the trustees with the workings of each branch college.

ONLY FEW SOLONS WITH AGRICULTURISTS AT TYBEE.

Although the legislature received an invitation to attend the convention of agriculturists in session at Tybee this week-end, few of the solons were able to attend. The Savannah Board of Trade urged the attendance of all members, and the senate accepted the invitation. The days of free railroad passes are past, however, and the state could not afford to send the solons, so most members either went straight home or stayed in Atlanta to see the sights of the Gate City.

SENATOR HARALSON WILL HAVE HIS DAILY PEACHES.

Senator Pat Haralson brings under his arm to the senate every day a little bag of peaches. He keeps them in his desk until the senate is called to order, and then begins to peel a juicy one, and passes the others around among his neighbors. There are seldom any vacant seats near Senator Haralson when he pulls out his little bag, and every senator prepares to enjoy some of Georgia's choicest fruit.

SENATOR J. J. MANGHAM FOR CLEAN ADVERTISING.

Senator J. J. Mangham, of the thirty-eighth, believes in beginning clean advertising and prohibition by eliminating the liquor advertisements from the newspapers. His bill to accomplish this in Georgia has passed the temperance committee, and he is prepared to fight for it on the floor of the senate.

"If you are going to have prohibition, have it all the way," is about the way Senator Mangham looks at it, and he stands by his position so firmly that he has won the admiration of a lot of people beside the prohibitionists. Senator Mangham is one of the most popular and powerful members of the upper house.

GOVERNOR HARRIS PLEASED OVER HOUSE RESOLUTION

Governor Harris is very proud of the joint resolution which was adopted by the senate and house in reference to his recent message. The governor is speaking of having it copied and framed. The resolution was introduced in the house by Representative C. S. Meadows, of Wayne county, and is as follows:

"Resolved, That the able and instructive message of Hon. Nathaniel E. Harris, governor, entitles him to the thanks of the people of Georgia; that we pledge such co-operation as will entitle him to a continued confidence of the people, as we believe in his conception of duty, evidenced by the power and wisdom of his fifth annual message, which will welcome his name in history as one among the greatest governors of Georgia, and we confidently believe that the great seal of the state with which he has been entrusted will be untrammeled by disturbance or detraction from liberty."

ATTORNEY GENERAL WALKER WOULD DEFEND JOE POTTLE

TWO IMPORTANT BILLS BEFORE HOUSE MONDAY

College Endowment and Compulsory Education Measures May Cause Heated Debates.

Two important bills are on the house calendar for Monday morning. One is the bill to exempt college endowments from taxation, and the other is a bill for compulsory education.

The college endowment bill is a senate bill introduced by Senator Walker, of the twentieth district. It is an amendment of section 6354 of the state code, which exempts certain properties and these words are inserted: "And also all funds or property held or used as endowment by any college." The new law, as amended, will read as follows:

"The general assembly may, by law, exempt from taxation all public property; places of religious worship or burial; all institutions of purely public charity; all buildings erected for and used as a college, incorporated academy, or seminary of learning, and also all funds or property held or used as endowment by such colleges, incorporated academies or seminaries; provided, that such property is not invested in real estate; the real and personal property of any public library, and that of any other literary association, used by or connected with such library, with books and philosophical apparatus; and all paintings and statuary of any college or association, kept in a public hall, and not held as merchandise or for purpose of sale or gain; property of a municipality exempted be not used for purposes of private or corporate profit or income."

A similar bill was before the legislature last year and failed of passage. That it will cause another fight at this session is predicted.

Compulsory Education Bill.

The other important measure to come up Monday is a bill by Mr. Hutcheson, of Turner, and Mr. Winn, of Houston, and is known as the compulsory education bill. The chief feature of the bill is as follows:

Section 1. Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by authority of the same, that each parent or guardian shall cause the children under his care, who are between the ages of 8 and 17 years, inclusive to attend school during at least three months of each year.

Sec. 2. Be it further enacted, that section 1 shall not apply where the mental or physical condition of the child renders it impracticable; where, through poverty, the family is dependent upon the services of the child; where the pupil has completed the fourth grade of school work; where the child is excused by the board of education because of necessary need for agricultural labor, inability to secure necessary books or clothing, or in such other cases as may be deemed reasonable by the board.

It will be a misdemeanor for any person to violate the law.

END OF "DOPE" HABIT PREDICTED BY BLALOCK

Complete eradication of the "dope" habit will result under the Harrison narcotic law is the conclusion of A. O. Blalock, internal revenue agent, who has been making an investigation of the astonishing decrease in the sale of opium, morphine, cocaine and other narcotics since the law became operative, March 1.

These investigations, which have been confined to the first ninety days of the law's enforcement, show that the sales by druggists of morphine and opium have decreased 50 to 65 per cent, and that the sale and use of cocaine has practically stopped in the cities and towns.

"Negroes have been addicted principally to the use of cocaine," said Mr. Blalock. "Physicians, however, are the provisions of the Harrison law governing its sale that their limited sources of obtaining this drug have been practically cut off. I may say, in fact, that its general use will soon be a thing of the past.

"In making these investigations and particularly in enforcing the Harrison law, I am gratified at the assistance given me and my department by the druggists and physicians of the state. At the present rate of decrease there will be very little narcotics sold in this country within a couple of years. Furthermore, the penalties attending the law's violation are so severe that no reputable dealer in drugs or writer of prescriptions can afford to take any chances.

"The revenue department, however, will need all the assistance it can obtain in coping with this evil. It has reached astonishing proportions which are not generally realized, for the persons addicted to this form of abuse without exception keep the habit as secret as possible."

In discussing the stringency of the Harrison law Mr. Blalock pointed out that physicians are forbidden to use of the drug, under a late ruling of the department at Washington, will not be permitted to obtain the order forms necessary for the narcotic prescription. Furthermore, physicians charged with the violation of the law will not be issued the forms. Physicians issuing narcotic prescriptions to patients cannot prescribe at one time more than the amount the patient needs for one dose. This effectually eliminates the probability of a patient obtaining amounts sufficient to be used at his desire.

NEW COUNTY ADVOCATES HAVE KEPT SOLONS BUSY

Of Half Dozen Originally Proposed, Two Have Already Met Defeat.

Up to date the proposed new counties number an even half-dozen.

Wilkes county died in the senate early in the struggle.

Cook county, to be composed of a portion of Berrien county, with Adel as the county seat, has been killed in the committee.

Atkinson county, to be composed of sections of Coffee and Clinch counties, with Pearson as the county seat, has met with a favorable report from the house committee on constitutional amendments. The first name proposed for this new county was Axon.

A bill to split off between James and Truetlen counties. Both take portions of the same counties and one or the other must go down in the fight. The committee has acted favorably on Truetlen county, but the James county advocates are keeping up the fight. Truetlen is to come from Montgomery and Emanuel counties, with Soperton as the county seat. James county is to come from Montgomery, Emanuel, Johnson and Jenkins counties, with Adrian as the county seat.

The proposed Howard county is yet to be heard from, as no committee has undertaken to decide its fate.

"I was all run down to the very bottom," writes F. Gagnon. "I had to quit work, I was so weak. Now, thanks to Sargol, I look like a new man. I gained 22 pounds in 23 days."

"Sargol has put 10 pounds on me in 14 days," states W. D. Roberts. "It has made me sleep well, enjoy what I ate and enabled me to work with interest and pleasure."

"I weighed 132 pounds when I commenced taking Sargol, after taking 20 days I weighed 144 pounds. Sargol is the most wonderful preparation for flesh building I have ever seen," declares D. Martin, and J. Meier adds: "For the past twenty years I have taken medicine every day for indigestion and got thinner every year. I took Sargol for forty days and feel better than I have felt in twenty years. My weight has increased from 159 to 170 pounds."

When hundreds of men and women—and there are hundreds, with more coming every day—living in every nook and corner of this broad land, voluntarily testify to weight increases ranging all the way from 10 to 35 pounds, given them by Sargol, you must admit, Mr. and Mrs. and Miss Thin Reader, that there must be something in this Sargol method of flesh building after all.

Hadn't you better look into it, just as thousands of others have done? Many thin folks say: "I'd give most anything to put on a little extra weight, but when someone suggests a way they exclaim, "Not a chance. Nothing will make me plump. I'm built to stay thin." Until you have tried Sargol, you do not and cannot know that this is true.

Sargol has put pounds of healthy "stay there" flesh on hundreds who doubted and in spite of their doubts. You don't have to believe in Sargol to grow plump from its use. You just take it and watch weight pile up, hollows vanish and your figure round out to pleasing and symmetrical proportions. You weigh yourself when you begin and again when you finish and you let the scales tell the story.

Sargol is just a tiny concentrated tablet. You take one with every meal. It mixes with the food you eat for the purpose of separating all of its flesh producing ingredients. It prepares these fat-making elements in an easily assimilated form, which the blood can readily absorb and carry all over your body. Plump, well-developed persons don't need Sargol to produce this result. Their assimilative machinery performs its functions without aid. But thin folks' assimilative organs do not. This fatty portion of their food now goes to waste through their bodies like unburned coal through an open grate. A few days' test of Sargol in your case will surely prove whether or not this is true of you. Isn't it worth trying?

50c BOX FREE

Latest Changes in Bridge Discussed by Mrs. Foster

Mrs. W. E. Foster, one of Atlanta's most prominent society women, who plays what the world calls "a good game of bridge," has consented to discuss some of the so-called rules of the game for publication. She has, to meet the demands of her friends, originated the score cards most popularly used in Atlanta, and she has consented to arrange a group of "test" hands, which she will discuss as soon as the rules pertaining thereto are completed.

"One of the new rules which all players do not know yet," explained Mrs. Foster yesterday, "is that dummy may call a revoke, but cannot look in adversaries' hand."

She further explained: "In cutting, spade is low; heart next, diamond next, and club highest. The amount of twenty-five will be taken from the honor score of any one examining cards before completion of deal. A bid of a greater number of tricks shall prevail over a lesser; that is, one 'no trump' over one of any suit; but three clubs over two 'no trumps;' five diamonds or clubs prevail over four spades; three 'no trumps' over three clubs; four 'no trumps' over four diamonds. If dealer exposes bottom card, adversary has a right to ask for a new cut.

"No longer is anything bid on so-called plain cards. Only royal spades are considered in the game, the score card showing now clubs, diamonds, hearts, spades (royal) 'no trumps.'"

Pertaining to counting the score, Mrs. Foster on her last score cards has the following rules observed by all players:

Score: 250 for each rubber. The declarer's side alone can score points. When declarer fails in fulfilling contract the adversary scores 50 for each trick declarer has failed to make; if doubled 100; if redoubled 200. When the declarer succeeds in fulfilling a contract doubled, he scores points doubled or redoubled, also a bonus of 50 for fulfilling contract, if redoubled, bonus is 100. He also scores 50 for each trick over the contract, and 100 if redoubled. If declarer revokes, adversary scores 100 on honor score. If adversary revokes, declarer has a choice between 100 on honor score or three tricks on game. A penalty of 25 on honor score is exacted for looking at a trick once turned. Dummy may call a revoke but cannot look in adversaries' hands.

"The little eccentricities are being barred more and more in playing cards," said Mrs. Foster.

"For instance, when the cards are cut, the cut should be completed by the one cutting, then held by the dealer in one hand and dealt. There are those who, when the cards are cut and not completed, will take up the other half of the pack and deal them. This is an eccentricity, and what may be called 'bad form' in the game. There are many of these eccentricities good players should bar.

"All card players are not good players, but all can play in 'good form,' and it is scarcely a gracious suggestion for a party on assembling to hear a guest exclaim, 'I don't want to be with Mrs. Blank—she plays so well, or, 'Put me with a weak player, I do not know the game well, and am out of practice.' There is ethics about cards like in every other game—even the game of life," said Mrs. Foster laughingly.

If milady wishes to wear just the hat which is now the predominating style in the fashion centers of the east, she will have to array herself in one of the latest patterns of velvet or satin, either in solid black, or black and white, which styles will be displayed and ready for immediate wear in Atlanta the coming week.

Miss Pearl Hardy, who has for a long while been in charge of the millinery department of the Davison-Paxon-Stokes company, and who makes occasional trips to the east to study advanced ideas in milady's headgear, has just returned to the city from a ten days' trip in northern and eastern markets, out of which she secured not only interesting and valuable suggestions touching the styles for immediate wear, but likewise much recreation and pleasure, visiting various summer resorts in that section.

"I enjoyed my trip immensely," she said, "visiting Belmont races, Brighton Beach, and stopping off at Atlantic City for a few days on my return home.

"I went up to study the advanced ideas in millinery and see the early showing in headwear for immediate wear. I found the predominating style was velvet and satin hats. These are in colors of solid black, or black and white, and are very pretty and fetching. The idea brought out in trimming is the flat brim trimming, appliqued with either chenille effects or flat effects in wings. I found, too, that roses were largely used in trimming, as well as novelty ribbon.

FOURTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS.

Kitty Gray, newspaper woman, finds in a curio shop half of a broken coin, the mutilated inscription on which arouses her curiosity and leads her, at the order of her managing editor, to go to the principality of Gretshoffen to piece out the story suggested by the inscription. She is followed, and on arrival in Gretzhoffen her adventures while chasing the secret of the broken coin begin.

CHAPTER XV.

If Your Majesty Please.

In full view of the spectators, who now had left the dancing floor and gathered in groups at a respectful distance from royalty, Kitty received the envelope from the messenger—the same packet which she had herself sent to the palace that morning for delivery at midnight.

She did this with a fine air of insouciance, for she felt quite sure that success now had met all her plans; nor did the outward appearance of the packet afford any reason to suspect otherwise.

Yet, even as she took the envelope in her hand, there came to her a sharp conviction that something was wrong. It had a strange lightness—it did not seem quite the same as when she herself had sealed it that morning. Hastily, she opened the envelope, her lips compressed. It was empty!

Yes, the mysterious coin was gone. Entrusted to the safest messenger she could find; sent to the king himself; received by the king's trusted official; guarded, as was to be supposed, every moment of the time since it had left her hands—none the less, the coin had disappeared as though some specter hand had abstracted it.

The blank look of surprise which came to her face was something not to be mistaken. King Michael frowned. "What is this, mademoiselle—are we made the subject of some sport? How now?"

Kitty stood regarding first one, then the next of the faces about her. On the countenance of Count Frederick she read only chagrin and surprise equal to her own. There was no trace of guilty knowledge there—she was sure of that. Then another hand had come into the game! Some other mind also was interested in the mysterious coin of Gretzhoffen.

"What then, mademoiselle?" demanded Michael, himself not yet so fully advised as others regarding the nature of this packet which had been intended for him. "What was it that you were so good as to intend sending us?"

Kitty dared not answer this direct question. She concluded quickly that it would be far safer to add as little as possible to the number of those who knew the full story of the traveling coin.

"Your majesty," said she, turning upon him so dazzling a smile as would have made any man forget all else. "It was nothing! It was but a small favor I would have sent your majesty, to show the acknowledgment of my own country, since your majesty has done such honor to me tonight. Perhaps someone in my humble menage has been unfaithful—if so, it was but small loss after all. If your majesty will forget it and give me a few added days of grace, I will explain—I will try again, I hope with greater fortune."

Michael was ready enough to agree to anything which would bring back to his society this dazzling young creature who stood beside him.

"Very well, mademoiselle," said he, "as you like."

A certain relief was felt by all concerned, as now he turned and made a sign to the leader of the orchestra, who stood, baton poised.

"With us, excellenza?" The king offered his arm. The king and the young American, of whose origin he knew, and apparently cared to know, nothing whatever, were the observed of all. Michael at least could dance, and as for Kitty, she was an American girl.

That she had earned this man's dislike, or at least, had deeply hurt his masculine vanity, Kitty was well enough aware. Yet it seemed this could not quite account for the strange expression on his face, as he gazed intently at her and her royal partner. She jumped at the conclusion that Sachio himself also had some interest—what or how much she could not divine—in this same troublesome coin. Yes, Sachio also had been an observer in this little drama but now enacted. He was watching her—she must watch him.

As for King Michael, he was extraordinarily sober; which, in his case, was equivalent to saying that he was not extraordinarily happy.

Count Frederick evaded the throngs about the king. Unwillingly he turned away his eyes from the beautiful figure of the young American as she danced. He never had seen a woman who thrilled him thus. He himself did not dance. This was no evening of pleasure for him. He had other plans.

Count Frederick started toward the door before a second thought came to his mind. If there should for any reason be miscarriage of his plans—if there should be need for yet greater delay before his final overt act was committed—then he ought to have a care to retain some footing in the king's good graces. Because, revolution or no revolution, the throne of Gretshoffen was not worth having unless its owner had both halves of this missing coin. Frederick cared not to be a penniless king, and only the united coin could give any king of Groetzhoffen actual wealth and actual power.

"Why do we starve while they dance?"

They began to edge towards the palace steps, a dark, dense mass. The soldiery were not eager to oppose them with steel. The soldiers were themselves of the people. Moreover, they had had small cause for loyalty to the king and court of Gretzhoffen. They were ill paid and ill governed.

The people lacked leadership. Count Frederick had hinged his own plans of action upon one event—the public disgrace of the king—and that event had not occurred.

He frowned as he stood looking out over the dense mass which filled the streets. Even he began to feel, almost in spite of himself, some sort of a vague pity for these less fortunate ones.

Still over the voice of the strings and reeds rose the low mutterings of the mob, strange to hear, impossible to describe.

King Michael heard this sound. All heard it, this voice of the people, as yet undecided. The king's face paled—terror smote home upon his soul. The courage of his usual alcoholic stimulant being tonight denied him, his weak nerves gave way.

He saw Count Frederick, now returning to the salon, from the great entrance door. The latter saw the terror of his monarch's face, and recognized on the instant the opportunity for himself to strengthen his own position in the king's good graces.

"Your majesty," exclaimed the astute nobleman, now advancing and offering his hand, "forgive me! I was in fault today in my conduct toward your majesty. 'Twas but a mad jest of my own. Give me but opportunity to prove my loyalty to your person and our country, and you shall not find me lacking. The people are about us—yes, it is true—there is danger of revolt, of revolution. I shall not attempt to deny that; but give me leave to handle them, your majesty, and I promise you safety. I promise you to send them away."

"You are indeed my friend, after all, Count Frederick!" exclaimed Michael. "What you counsel seems wise. Use your own discretion, but disperse them—disperse them."

Looking from one to the other, Kitty Gray saw what seemed to her the pitiable spectacle of a king so weak as to lack confidence in his own powers, so unkingly as to resort to the aid of a man whom but now he had been willing to call his enemy. A genuine contempt for him overcame her, as she stood, a look of appraising seriousness upon her face.

"Perhaps your majesty will care no more for the dance?" said she. "Since the people seem to be discontended, and are not to join us in this enjoyment, perhaps your majesty soon will retire?"

"Yes, yes, excellenza, we soon will retire from the dance." The face of Michael was agitated. It seemed to her that a trifle more and he would have shed tears!

Count Frederick hastened to address the people, who now halted, uncertain as to what move next to make. His own agents had been among the people, and had made known his own plans. Yet here was their master, evidently, for some reason, disinclined to give the word for actual outbreak, and now counseling calm, consideration, dispersal.

"My good people," began he, as he stood at the head of the great stairway above them—"his majesty thanks you for the honor you have done him in coming out upon this occasion. He himself has found great pleasure in coming here to meet you tonight, although he arose from a sick bed to do so. He wishes you to be calm in these stirring days. He has planned this great ball in order that you might see the equanimity of his own soul in these events, so difficult alike for a king and his people to endure. Therefore, remain loyal to your king, whom I represent before you. The ballroom soon will be cleared. Let the streets also be cleared. Go to your homes. Wait, and depend on us who have your true welfare at heart."

There surged up to him now the figures of more than one man, some in uniform, from places in the throng, in the street. "What is it—what is wrong—why do we not have the order to march on the palace?" they demanded eagerly.

"All is wrong," whispered Count Frederick to them. "For some reason, best known to himself, the king is not drunk tonight, but sober. His people are not turned against him—on the contrary, they seem to respect him more than they have done for months—there would be division among them if we started open revolt now."

"Here, take this gold, my friends," he added, and stripped himself of some considerable sums he had brought with him. "It is all I have. Give it to those who need it most. Take them away from here—let them go to the drinking places. See that these places are filled now, and that the toast shall be, 'Long live King Michael!'"

"We may not yet cry 'Long live King Frederick?'"

The nobleman shook his head. "Not yet," said he. "They still shall cry 'Long live King Michael.' That will do for the time at least."

Count Frederick returned through the great entryway and rejoined King Michael where he stood. "Your majesty," said he, "your people are returning to their homes."

"Frederick, my friend, my savior!" The weak king, his features working, grasped the hands of the stronger man. "You tell me they will disperse?"

"Even now they do so, your majesty."

Kitty, by this time somewhat forgotten in the king's vacillating mind, stood looking from one to the other of these two. As she read the situation, it carried somewhat of defeat to her. An instant ago she herself had dominated the scene. Otherwise now; for Count Frederick gave her a somewhat sarcastic smile. It was the time of his triumph and of her discomfiture.

"Mademoiselle is distrait?" said he. "She is not dancing—she will return to her hotel, perhaps? What can one do for mademoiselle?"

Kitty turned toward him calmly. "If I might ask one of you gentlemen to secure my car for me?" Count Frederick smiled and bowed as he turned away.

But Kitty was not so soon to leave the great salon of the palace that night. She passed toward the entrance slowly, caught in the crush and confusion of others who were crowding out in the fiasco of the much-vaunted black and white ball. For the time, she found herself in the shelter of a great column, where she was willing enough to pause. As she halted here she heard voices just behind her—one deep voice, which it seemed to her she had surely heard before.

"It is a pity that the affair did not come off tonight, your excellency," she heard another whisper hoarsely. "We have everything in our own hands now. I have all the plans of the fortifications, the maps of the avenues, the specifications for each street crossing. It would have been entirely simple for the army of Grahoffen to march through this ramshackle city as it liked."

"Yes!" broke in the deep voice which haunted Kitty's memory, "I suppose so; but what would we do if we could not pay our troops the next day? How much better off than Gretzhoffen would then be our own case? No, Frederick is right in his main plan. The throne alone is worth nothing—it is worthless in his kingdom or in our kingdom or in any other—a poverty-stricken kingship is no business for any man. Why have you not a diagram of the treasure's burial place—with that, now, the matter would be somewhat different tonight."

"Hush!" she heard the other voice whisper. Apparently warned, at least, by their suspicions, they moved away, although Kitty shifted her own position so that her presence was not known.

Was it Count Sachio's voice she had heard—was he, the king's friend, Count Frederick's friend, the worst traitor of all, and was he also plotting for the restoration of the two lost bits of Gretzhoffen coin?

Which way should she turn now? To Frederick? Impossible. To Michael? Equally impossible.

The two men whose talk she had overheard, passed now from behind the pillar toward the interior of the palace. Apparently they were known there and welcome, for surely they were not stopped by any of the king's guards or chamberlains, and Kitty herself, equally well identified, passed readily just behind them.

Kitty needed but one glance at the man she trailed to see it was indeed Count Sachio whose voice she heard.

The men passed now to a little room at one side of the main hall, which traversed that portion of the palace. A window and a door, both lightly curtained, opened from the hall within. Kitty, as she drew up, could see them now—Sachio, and one whose identity she did not know.

"Listen now," she heard Count Sachio's voice boom out, since here they felt themselves quite safe from intrusion; "listen, while I tell you what is the real key to all these matters. It is this document, bearing on the missing treasure of old King Michael. He died rich, but like a miser, he hid his gold. He left a clue, yes—I have told you all of that. That clue was the broken coin."

"That coin was the same as deed in the old days. All transfers of realty, as you remember, were made on parchment, written in pen, and the parchment always was cut in two pieces on a waving line. The seller kept half the parchment, the buyer the other half. And always it ran 'This indenture witnesseth.' The 'indenture' was the waving line which divided the parchment; and the parchment was proof of the transaction, so each holder held half the proof.

"Now, this indenture of the broken coin of Gretzhoffen witnessed that Michael the First had transferred to his people his treasure—their treasure—for delivery to the king on the dancing floor at midnight that night—and Count Sachio, by means which he only knew, had been the thief! It now was plain to her. Here was one more claimant for the treasure of the dead king of Gretzhoffen.

Count Sachio went on. "This is one-half only of the coin. Alone, it does not serve. I know well enough where lies the other half. Within the next twenty-four hours I will have it—I will have both halves within my own hands. Then, my friend, we shall see what we shall see! Events will happen which will surprise this part of the world, at least.

"Come to me tomorrow at my hunting lodge in the forest, at the edge of the neutral lands. That is the rendezvous of the other half of the coin. I shall seek a messenger to secure it. I know well enough how. Have our men there, for I, Count Sachio, will be prepared to show them all the reading of a riddle which has puzzled both these kingdoms for so long."

Had Kitty remained a moment or so longer she might have seen what the conspirators themselves, anxious as they were, did not see. The face of a strange man peered in at the window of the room which they occupied. He, too, could see now all that Kitty had seen, although he had not been noticed by the latter at the time of her departure.

The grand salon by this time was well cleared, and Kitty made her way rapidly toward the main exit. Suddenly she found herself face to face with a little group made up of the king and notables of his court. They, too, for a time had been absent from the grand salon—apparently for a certain purpose. King Michael now did not lack the stimulus of wine. "Our fair young American again!" he exclaimed, as he came. "What, mademoiselle has not even yet departed?"

"It is my fault, your majesty," said Count Frederick. "I promised to secure for her a car, but for the time I lost sight of her. The confusion has been so great that it has been difficult to find service of the usual sort."

"Tomorrow," said she to herself, as at length she composed herself for a brief slumber—"tomorrow I must be at the hunting lodge of Count Sachio once more!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Another Seeks the Coin.

Debarred by his own station in life from participating in any such function as the state ball, the faithful Roleau had contented himself as best might be by remaining at the hotel until the return of his mistress. By morning, as soon as he got word of her presence in her apartments, he sent word that he was in readiness to be at her commands.

"Roleau," she said to him when they met, "listen. We have still more to do. There is still another journey across the desert."

"Whither, excellenza?" inquired Roleau.

"To the hunting lodge of the Count Sachio—the same place where you and I took the part of two horse thieves, Roleau!"

A few moments later the two, once more provided with a speedy motor car, were on their way down the avenues of the capital.

"I think it might be well to drive past the two palaces," said Kitty Gray. "We might pick up some news there. First, let us go to the palace of Count Frederick—perhaps he is not out this early."

But, early though it was, Count Frederick was astir—was indeed ready for the street apparently, as was also his guest, Count Sachio. Even as Kitty's car swept by the palace front they saw the count and Sachio step into their own car, which waited for them at the curb.

"Quick!" said Kitty, sinking back deeper in the seat that she might not be observed. "Drive around the block. Don't let them see me." She motioned also to Roleau to conceal himself as best he might. Their own car, swinging around the corner, gave way for the vehicle of Count Frederick, which sped on down the street.

Once more, still undaunted, Kitty directed her own car to pass around the block and stop in front of Count Frederick's palace. This was done in the nick of time; for now, as they passed at lower speed, in order to have time for such examination as they cared to make of the exterior, they saw a man in some sort of official uniform walking from the front down the driveway for the side entrance of the great building.

"Stop," cried Kitty to Roleau—"I know that man—that is the friend of Sachio! I saw the two of them together last night. It was to him Sachio showed the coin. I heard him tell this man where the missing half was. Roleau, that man has gone to get Count Frederick's half of the coin!"

"Certainly, excellenza," said the stolid Roleau. "Count Sachio also means to put this and that together, does he not? What can we do? Is your excellency game to try one more entrance into Count Frederick's house?"

"Yes," said Kitty. "Come—let us see if we can trace where that man is going."

Once more these two presented themselves at the door of Count Frederick's abode, and were admitted without question.

The two passed without detention through the main hall to the passage way which Kitty knew so well. They followed down this narrow hall, suspecting that the destination of the man whom they had seen about to enter was none less than Count Frederick's little bedchamber.

Their suspicion was correct. Even as they approached they heard someone in the room who had arrived before themselves. Roleau, followed closely by Kitty, stepped up to the door—peered in, and gave one mighty bound.

In the powerful hands of Roleau, the stranger, taken by surprise, was helpless. Roleau clapped a hand over his mouth, another to his throat, and held him until he himself made the sign of submission. "Silence!" hissed Roleau. "Don't move—one word of alarm and I will end you!"

"What are you doing here?" demanded Kitty virtuously—"what do you seek—tell me!"

The man, gone sullen now, looked from one to the other, and knowing well enough what failure would mean for him, refused to speak. "Well, whatever it was," said he at length, "I have not found it. At least, you came too soon."

"I will tell you, excellenza," said Roleau at length. "It will do us no special good to have him join yonder party of which we know. I will tie him up, if your excellency will allow me."

Accordingly he did bind the frate official of Grahaffen neck and crop.

At Count Sachio's Lodge.

Such speed did Roleau manage to get out of his own car that Kitty and he arrived at the hunting lodge of Count Sachio well in advance of all others bound thither that eventful morning.

Kitty and Roleau moved about very much as they pleased after their entry. It pleased them best to hide themselves in a small room adjacent to the main hall where they fancied the main events of the day would perhaps find enactment. A door and window made connection between these two rooms, and behind the curtains in the smaller room they fancied they could be sufficiently concealed.

But there were others who had an interest in the events to occur in the hunting lodge of Count Sachio that morning. The tangled skein of the mysterious coin was expanding, drawing in yet others. Hardly had Kitty and Roleau secreted themselves before they heard footfalls under the window of the gallery which ran along that side of the chalet. They wondered who might be the author and what his purpose.

It was somewhat later before they heard the mingling of voices and the sound of footfalls, which announced the arrival of another party in the main room.

"Rudolph!" exclaimed Count Sachio. "Why has he not come? What has gone wrong?"

But none could explain to him why Rudolph had not arrived—nor at the time did either Kitty or Roleau know who or what Rudolph might be—although, as a matter of fact, it was he whom they themselves had left tied hand and foot in Count Frederick's palace. Nor could any of these present know that before this time Count Frederick himself, returning to his palace, had found yonder intruder, bound and left helpless, in his own private apartment. The man had made such excuses as he could by declaring that he had been robbed and thrown in the room by a ruffian, assisted by a beautiful woman. And Count Frederick, finding on the floor of his own apartment a tiny handkerchief, had needed scarce more than one guess as to who that young woman had been.

But as to all these side scenes which had been enacted, Count Sachio was altogether ignorant. Wherefore he now walked up and down, now exclaiming his own doubts. His irritation was obvious enough to Kitty as she peered through the veiled curtain and strained her ears to learn what he was saying.

Even as she stood intent on what was going on in the main room, Roleau close at her side, also absorbed—the author of the stealthy footfalls on the gallery below the window crept silently up and looked in upon them as they watched—a spy upon those who in turn spied upon others.

"So, she is not alone!" he whispered to himself. "That man with her will make a different proposition. Between them, they will take away from Count Sachio what I want for myself!"

He slipped in now from the gallery, through the open window. Stealthy as a cat, he crept up inch by inch upon the two watchers.

"I tell you," cried out Count Sachio, crashing his fist down upon the table, "there is no such thing as explaining a thing like this! This failure can never be justified. I sent Rudolph to get the coin—he knew where it was—he was not suspected by anyone—I told him precisely what to do. Has he done it? No. And here we wait. It is something I shall not forget."

These loud words caught Kitty's attention. She pressed forward eagerly, her figure still half shrouded. Her own senses, strained as they were to catch what was going on in the main room, were less regardful of what was going on immediately about her.

The silent man who had spied upon them crept inch by inch toward them. Slowly, deliberately, he raised his right hand above the unsuspecting girl. In that hand he held poised a murderous looking blade.

CITY HALL GOSSIP

BY A. CLOYD GILL

LOCAL ARCHITECTS DRAWING HIGH SCHOOL PLANS

Half a dozen local architects have been invited to draw tentative plans for the proposed University High school, and at their request they will be given sufficient time in which to secure information from other cities which have consolidated high school plants so that Atlanta may profit by the experience of others. The subcommittee which was named to work out the details for the school will not meet until plans have been prepared by the architects.

PEANUT VENDORS SWAPPING LICENSES

License Inspector Charles J. Woodall and Assistant Inspector W. W. Thompson have enriched the city's treasury by several hundred dollars during the past week as a result of a campaign against license tax dodgers. On Friday afternoon they investigated several peanut stand operators and found that the vendors had a system of swapping licenses. When Inspector Thompson called on an operator he said his license was at his home. The plan was to have the inspector wait until the operator could go get the license. It developed that instead of going home he would go to another operator around the corner and borrow his license. Inspector Woodall Friday afternoon followed several of the operators several blocks and the chase ended in having the operator go to city hall and take out a license costing $20. From 3 o'clock Friday afternoon until noon Saturday six operators had taken out licenses aggregating $120.

PARK DEPARTMENT IMPROVING ADAIR PARK

The park department is now centering its efforts on the improvement of Adair Park, a tract donated to the city by Forrest and George Adair. Tennis courts have been graded on the park and are now being patronized daily by scores of young people. One of the city playgrounds located on the park grounds has a full set of apparatus and is proving quite popular. The park manager is now having a gang of workmen place fertilizer and grass on the park with a view to sodding it. Drain pipes will be installed later and it is predicted that Adair Park will ultimately be one of the most attractive parks in the city. It is located directly across the street from the Adair public school building.

CITY ELECTRICIAN WANTS UNDERGROUND WIRES

R. C. Turner, city electrician, has asked the board of electrical control to investigate the situation that has arisen on Decatur street since the Postal Telegraph company has determined on competing with the Bell Telephone company in its long distance telephone service. The Postal contemplates installing a long distance service to Augusta and its poles will be placed on Decatur street from the downtown district to the city limits. Mr. Turner states that if this is done there will be four sets of poles on the street in question—Postal, Western Union, Bell and Atlanta Telephone companies. He says such a condition will be unsightly and that the abutting property owners have registered complaints against such a procedure. He will ask the board to force all four companies to place their wires underground. The Postal formerly used the poles of the Bell company for its telegraph service, but since they will operate a telephone system in competition the Bell company will not permit the use of their poles.

NO FLIES DELIVERED BY FLY-SWATTER

The board of health has not yet received any flies from the official fly-swatter for Atlanta, but it is probable that they will be called on early this week to pay for a big lot since the swatter has in operation a large number of fly traps in various sections of the city. Many householders who have seen the traps in operation on the streets have inquired at the board of health offices to find out whether or not the traps will be sold to private families. The board is not selling the traps, but they may be secured later from Henry Richardson, who is in charge of the fly campaign here.

M'LAIN'S SILK KERCHIEF MATRIMONIAL WARD

Athel McLain, deputy in the office of City Clerk Walter C. Taylor, is the only unmarried man in the office, but he says he may join the benedicts shortly since he had learned from an escaped young man across the street from city hall a highly satisfactory method for "catching the girls." He learned of this recently when the young man in question borrowed on four consecutive nights McLain's silk kerchief. Through a mutual friend he learned that the young man across the street used the kerchief only at night and in reply to a question of why he used it he answered: "Why, I just wear my blue serge suit out to Inman Park and place the kerchief in the outside pocket, letting the corners flow gracefully outside. The effect is good. You ought to try it." McLain says he is going to experiment if his friend returns the kerchief, which was last borrowed on Friday night.

LAWSUIT INVOLVES MANY FINE HOMES IN NORTH DUBLIN

Dublin, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—Laurens superior court will open Monday morning, and for the first time in several courts there are no big murder trials nor criminal cases to be heard during the session, the main interest centering around a big civil case which involves the validity of the title to a large portion of the choicest residence property in Dublin.

Years ago the late Judge A. T. Duncan purchased a large tract of land, which was to go at his death, according to the terms of the deed, to his wife, or to his future wife, to be held until her death for her children living at the time the deed was made, who numbered three, one of them, Mrs. Jennie Overby, being deceased at this time, and leaving several heirs. The clause in the old deed was forgotten or overlooked by persons who purchased the property when it was finally sold off by all the heirs of Judge Duncan, four in number, following the death of his last wife a few years ago. Now the heirs of Mrs. Overby have brought suit to recover a large portion of the land, thus sold, declaring that under the terms of the original deed it was not properly divided, and they have a right to the land. Inasmuch as most of the land is now built up in beautiful homes in the northwestern section of the city, there is a big fight over the suit being made by the various owners, and local interest is high in the outcome of the case.

Marlborough-Blenheim,
ATLANTIC CITY, N. J.
THE LEADING RESORT HOUSE OF THE WORLD
Capacity 1100 American and European Plans
The great essential of a resort hotel, as distinguished from a city hotel, is ample public space devoted to the use of its guests, in the form of bright and airy Exchanges, Lobbies, Parlors, Galleries and Solariums, affording pleasing vistas and beautiful promenades, the whole combining into a harmonious vision of grandeur and beauty, while replete with the cozy group seclusions of home, and yet affording full view of the pleasing panorama of the resort life. In this essential the Marlborough-Blenheim stands without an equal in Atlantic City or elsewhere.
Its "Ownership Management," while accounting for its unique reputation, is a guaranty of the high character of its patronage and the unexcelled quality of its service and cuisine. It employs only white service in both its American and a la carte dining rooms.
It makes a specialty of its high-class music every evening throughout the year, with special Sunday night solo features. Romani, the world's highest Tenor, of Venice, is engaged to sing at frequent intervals during July, August and September.
Atlantic City, with its only real commitor (Europe) this year impossible, is offering unusual attractions and entertainments. Two fine boats are daily sources of interest. Two golf courses, the Yacht Club, the fishing fleet and the wonderful bathing beach attract their respective devotees, while the pier amusements, the Boardwalk, the fine motor roads and the splendid hotels and restaurants, afford enjoyment to all. There is only one Atlantic City, and this summer it is particularly attractive. Write for illustrated booklet and rates.

THE HOME GARDEN

Director Experiment Station, Experiment, Ga.

Frequently people regard hedgerows as out-of-the-way places and bank trash and other waste material behind them. In such cases the hedges are used as a blind to conceal any kind of ugliness that results from our careless-ness. It is strange that people ever get the idea that trash should be saved behind the beautiful hedges, or any other place. Shall we ever need the trash any worse than we do when it is stored behind the hedge? Or is it a fact that we should regard one side of the hedge as any more sacred than we should the other? Should the space behind the hedge be spoiled with all kinds of waste material only to betray our own weakness?

A hedge is something to make more beautiful the lot or landscape, and should be planned so that it will accomplish this purpose. It should never be used to make the beautiful more beautiful and the filthy corners more filthy. Such use of a hedge is inexcusable. In other words, a hedge should never be used for concealing any kind of waste. because one side of the hedge is supposed to be as pretty as the other, and unless it is so, it would perhaps be better not to have the hedge at all.

For Dividing Lots.

Frequently hedges are used for dividing lines between farm lots. When kept well trimmed, this makes an ideal boundary line. If, for any other for driveway divides the lots, then two hedges ought to be planted instead of one. The drive should have a hedge on each side. In this case the hedges would not be used on the lines to conceal an ugly drive, but simply to divide the lots, for the driveway is to be kept clean and clear and the hedge beautifies both the lawns and the driveway.

Place for Hedges.

If one desires to run a fence line along some front or back way and a fence does not seem to suit, improve the looks of the lot or place of improvement sufficiently, here is a place for a hedge. Generally a hedge will be improved by having a hedge by it, either or both sides. The home owners rarely have hedges about their homes, and this is a good idea. Americans are too inclined to consider entertainment and amusement on the passing to and fro of the transient mass of humanity, and too inclined to obstruct their view. They find this an easy way to pass over the hours from day to day. But does this form of amusement beget or develop strong characters? Does it help to further the best interests of the race? Personally I think not.

Here is where the English are perhaps superior to the Americans. They find home itself and its many interesting things therein and thereabouts quite sufficient to amuse and entertain them. A beautiful hedge would not be out of place, therefore, along a public highway, or across the homes and gardens from the public and help to intensify the privacy of the home. How I love to think of the home as being a world within itself, a place for all kinds of games and amusements, as well as for intellectual pursuits. It should be a place where all for having friends and inviting strangers; for sharing good fortune as well as misfortune. Most of our leaders in thought as well as public affairs are made in the home. A lack of love for home brings on trouble and generally ends in divorce, suicide or other forms of crime.

We are forced to acknowledge that the looks of the home and its environment has a fundamental effect on the dwellers therein. This has been decided by great students, and I am prepared to believe it. The hedgerow is of special value along this line, because it is capable of making such an ideal private garden, in which time can be spent in the cool of the afternoon, and in which work can be done by those who so desire. The nerves need the kind of tonic that always accompanies a certain amount of physical labor. This is easy to do when we have the proper environment. A little physical exercise would keep many a person away from the hospital, and perhaps save the life of some.

Kinds of Trees to Be Used for Hedges.

For hedges that are to last many or drivaways, the privet and citrus hedges would perhaps be best. The boxwood and the California privet are also used. In England the hawthorne is popular, which is a near relative for a low or a high hedge. Around gardens and pleasure grounds the beech is used, but this makes a fine ornamental hedge, but it grows very slowly. The Osage, hornbeam, lime and other such trees are used for ornamentaly hedges. Many of the evergreens can be used for screens along public highways. Spiraeas and viburnums are frequently used and with good effect.

Trimming of Hedges.

If hedges are to be used for ornamental purposes and of health, they ought carefully trimmed, otherwise they may prove anything but ornamental. Certain trees and shrubbery are adapted to certain forms of trimming, which is generally suggested by the desire of who sells the small trees. No specific rule can be given for trimming hedges, but it will generally depend on the taste of the individuals. Do not trim hedges too early if one's taste is to have the hedges of them. Be'n to keep the shrubbery from absorbing too much room to have it grow, both in height and width.

Time for Planting the Hedge.

The fall is the time for planting any kind of hedge with the exception of hedge. Now is the time to begin selecting the species of trees for the different places in which we wish to grow hedges. Get your catalogs and write a correspondence with the nurserymen now, so you will not be late in planting.

Beautiful Women Spies

More Dangerous, Harder to Capture—and They Die Just as Bravely as Men

Some of the Most Ingenious Plots to Obtain and Convey Plans Hatched in the Present War Have Been Traced to Them — And Their Perpetrators Have Suffered the Death Penalty

SOME of the most thrilling chapters in the history of the world's wars are those in which women have played a conspicuous part. The stories of their escapades in the role of spies in many cases baffle the ingenious imaginations of such authors as Jules Verne and H. G. Wells, and are far too intricate and complex for the art of the cinematograph actor.

Women of a certain type of mind and character lend themselves admirably to the precarious and highly dangerous profession, and their services have been retained by many of the continental powers. In peace, as well as in war, they carry on their work, and are far more dangerous and far less subject to capture than their male colleagues.

British Deport "Beauty Specialist."

Mme. Bertha Trost, declared by British officials to be the most dangerous spy in the world, has just been deported from England as a German spy. For thirty years, according to the Scotland Yard officials who have been investigating her career, she has lived in England in expensive apartments that were far beyond her visible income.

During most of that period she operated an exclusive little beauty parlor that served rather to place her in touch with titled English women than increase her revenue. As months went on influential women fell deeper and deeper into her debt. Although Mme. Trost never demanded payment she revealed an insatiable curiosity—a curiosity that dealt largely with affairs of state. The women who had revealed their physical ailments to Mme. Trost feared to refuse and— Well, Mme. Trost is charged with obtaining any information she desired.

MME. BERTHA TROST, London Beauty Specialist Who Just Has Been Expelled From England as a Dangerous German Agent. She is Said to Be the Most Adroit Spy in the World.

Long before the war, say the English, Germany employed hundreds of feminine spies—beautiful society women, in many cases. These women have played important parts in the present campaign.

One System Detailed.

Here is a typical case as cited in London: By accident a woman handed a sentry the very note that she was to have given to the Germans, in mistake for the permit that she had to show in order to cross the bridge between Varangville and St. Nicholas. She was charged before a court of war and later executed.

Another woman dropped a letter, which read: "Hurry up; the Twentieth Corps arrives this evening." She dropped it at the gates of Nancy, and was straightway arrested. During the battle of the Aisne a woman was one night discovered signaling from a window to the Germans by means of an electric torch.

Attached to the garrison at Posen was a young officer named Schorveder, who was very poor. He was deeply in love with a named Ida Muller hal, but, owing to his poverty, the prospect of their getting married was very remote. The lovers' trouble was known to a Russian secret agent, who approached the lieutenant and offered him $25,000 for a plan of the fortress of Posen. Dazzled by this offer, the lieutenant agreed, but he found it difficult to carry out his task. His sweetheart then suggested a cunning way out of the difficulty.

"You shall tattoo a plan of the fortress on my back," she said. "I shall easily be able to travel to Russia with it without being discovered."

They carried out their fantastic idea successfully, but the silly extravagance in which the newly wedded couple indulged after the girl returned to Posen aroused suspicion, and they were both arrested.

During our civil war S. Emma E. Edmonds was on the field and participated in numerous battles—among them the first and second Bull Run, Williamsburg, Fair Oaks, the Seven Days in front of Richmond, Antietam and Fredericksburg—serving in the capacity of spy and field nurse for more than two years. While in the secret service as a spy she penetrated the lines of the confederate army no less than eleven times always with complete success and without detection.

There is the story on record of a German woman, Fraulein Petsche, who succeeded in giving considerable assistance to the Prussians in their war with France. Attired as a simple and innocent French peasant woman, she managed to elude the French sentries and enter the camp. No one suspected she was a spy, and, being a woman of rather attractive looks and able to converse fluently in French, she succeeded in captivating the heart of several soldiers. While in the camp she gave considerable assistance to the men, and even helped to minister to the sick and wounded. When the fighting relaxed a little she made violent love to a young captain. This was all for a purpose.

The captain was commanded to undertake dispatch duty, and was sent by MacMahon with letters to Bazaine, with whose forces MacMahon was endeavoring to unite. It was natural that the young dispatch rider should desire to bid farewell to his new sweetheart. They left the camp together, the captain leading his horse, and they walked to a considerable distance from the view of the outposts. It was beginning to get dark, and under the cover of the trees the woman took the opportunity of securing the officer's message.

Pretending to feel the parting keenly, she commenced to weep, and, pulling out a handkerchief, clapped it over the captain's face. He immediately became insensible and fell to the ground. With desperate haste the woman must have forced a phial of poison into his mouth, and rode away with the dispatch toward the German camp. That incident took place near Metz, and the Prussians afterward rapidly advanced and won the battles of Vionville, Mars-le-Tour and Gravelotte, where, at the latter battle, the woman, while preparing for another expedition, was wounded and died an hour later, on Aug. 18, 1870.

S. EMMA E. EDMONDS, One of the Most Famous Woman Spies of History, Served the Union Forces During the Civil War. Here She Is Shown Disguised as a Negro and Studying the Fortifications of the Confederate Army at Yorktown. She Worked on the Breastworks Until Her Hands Were Blistered From Her Wrists to the Finger Ends.

The Pretty Duchess of Sutherland, One of Several Women of English Nobility Who Are Acting as "Spy Trappers" in the Present War. They Have Induced Englishmen to Discharge All Help Whose Sympathies, as Ascertained by the Women, Are With the Enemy.

"The Officer Was Offered $25,000 for a Plan of the Fortress of Posen. He Agreed and His Sweetheart Suggested a Cunning Way Out of the Difficulty. 'You Shall Tattoo a Plan of the Fortress on My Back,' She Said. 'I Shall Easily Be Able to Travel to Russia With It.'"

Bears Abandon German Success As an Argument of Depression

Labor Troubles Cause Heavy Liquidation of War Specialty Group—Kaiser's Renewal Submarine Attacks on Ships Bearing Neutrals Creates Anxiety.

New York, July 24.—(Special.)—The stock market was sharply reactionary early in the last week, with heavy selling in war specialties from the first moments of trading on Monday morning. This selling was largely a result of the labor troubles which have cropped up in the munitions industry. Another cause of selling was the "Ordnus" attempt, by which it was supposed that Germany may make all kinds of promises to the United States and yet go ahead with her own way of shooting submarine war regardless of American rights. These two causes were also aided by a feeling that a crisis in the American-German relations may be near at hand—that the time has come when any further action on the part of Germany which might be followed by at least a severance of diplomatic relations. When stocks were looming a week earlier, traders were inclined to believe that Germany would concede to the viewpoint of the United States in the end, but the attempt to send a torpedo into the Ordnus it regarded as the equivalent of a refusal to abandon the former methods of submarine warfare found to be contrary to the ideas of this country as to the proper method of naval procedure. In view of the possibilities the new crisis held, many large financial interests found it advisable to unload a large amount of recently purchased stock, with its activity, on Monday, but when such offerings were exhausted, more firmly held securities did not come out and the market turned dull. Foreign selling was in very small lots, and it is believed that the liquidation for Europe is over until some new cause for it arises in this country. Reasons for selling during the last week was a statement by a high official of one of the "coming in" banks to the effect that he was that "his company did not have much loan open at all, and was unafraid," in fact, he said that the total business was about one-tenth of that ascribed by rumor. This also called attention to the probability of general exaggeration of "war profits" in the war specialties declined for a time, but several recovered sharply later in the week, or two thirds of the way to the high records. Toward the week-end, the general tone of the market improved and it was said in the market that such good basis of renewed strength had been furnished by the shaking out of weak accounts. German advices in the last week were much talked about during the week in financial circles as they were also quite recently. Only within a month or so has there been any evidence that bears have abandoned the German war as an argument to depress the price of securities.

Money Market Featureless.

The money market has been without feature with rates for loans on the banks having more to lend than was covered by borrowing demand, for a number of weeks. There is no apparent prospect of change in this condition for long time to come.

The foreign exchange market was a little easier. Russian exchange was very weak, reflecting the fact that Russia had made large purchases in the United States and Canada, and has been unable to make payments either in money or goods to any appreciable extent. It is believed that Russian exchange will sink to such low levels that the market will practically cease to exist.

Preliminary estimates of the total to be shown in the fiscal year for exports of exports and imports of the United States during the fiscal year to June 30 last, place exports of merchandise at about $2,800,000,000, an increase of about $1,000,000,000 over last year. Imports, with imports of about $1,660,000,000 or about $235,000,000 less than the year before. The indicated balance of trade for the year is about $1,140,000,000, as against $760,000,000 for the year, the $757,300 the year before. The outlook for the trade balance in favor of the United States has been paid off.

Labor Trouble Growing.

Labor troubles in eastern oil works are, likewise, menacing, and labor grievances on the part of employees, but these are unsupported by evidence connected with strikes and threats of strikes at several of the larger plants working on army and navy ammunition. No direct evidence of interference due to machinations of foreign agents in these plants has come to light as yet, but it is the belief of many people high up in financial circles that dissatisfaction among the laborers at the plants was started by agitators in the pay of a foreign nation. Threats have been made by members of the German and Austrian colonies in this country that if the United States continues to export arms and ammunition to the Allies, laboring classes will go on strike en masse. Whether or not the present labor troubles have had origin in this, of great interest to manufacturers and financial interests of the country.

Railroad Earnings Increase.

Railroad reports of earnings indicate that increase in net continues to be the gross and the net column as compared with the earlier portion of the calendar year and as compared with a year ago, but nearly all reports show that the increase is relatively small. The total of two and three years ago for corresponding periods is on an altogether different degree. The relief given to railroads when they petitioned for higher freight rates over a year ago has not proved adequate, but the higher rates granted last December have undoubtedly saved several railroads from a sharp decline in net earnings.

The dividend policy of corporations continues to offer encouragement, with a number of continued increases during the last week and with several increases or initial dividends. The most important company discontinued its regular payments.

During August less than the usual amount of corporation maturities have to be met, only $25,000,000 of $50,000,000 in securities coming due, which is far below the average for the year 1915 of $60,000,000 a month. Most of the $850,000,000 maturities of 1915 have been met already. The bulk of the August maturities have been provided for already.

Dividend and interest payments during August will be a little under $160,000,000, of which about $45,000,000 will be in dividends. The total disbursement about equals last year for August, when most of the dividend rates for the month had been declared before the war started. For September this year, however, the dividend payments will probably be much larger than for that month in 1914.

Railroad Reorganizations.

The reorganization plan of the St. Louis and San Francisco has not as yet been officially published, but it is understood that the stock will have to pay $50 a share for which an equal par value of bonds will be given.

The Wabash railroad has been sold for $15,000,000 to the reorganization committee. It is over four and one-half years since receivers first took charge of the properties.

The dissolution of the Amalgamated Copper company has the effect that it was first supposed and it may now be four or five weeks longer before it is affected and full control of its assets and properties turned over to the Anaconda Copper company. During the last week the exchange of two shares of Anaconda, par value $25 each, for one new share, par value $50, was started. After a few weeks old certificates will not be accepted as good delivery for sale on the stock exchange, while from now on no dividends will be paid by the company excepting on new certificates. These provisions are made to make it imperative to holders of the old stock to turn it in promptly.

Reports are current in Wall street, some of them with Washington origin, that the interstate commerce commission is preparing criminal proceedings to be brought against directors and officials of the Rock Island system. The placing of the road in receivers' hands has not been favorably regarded in Wall street outside of the group responsible for the proceedings.

Overproduction of Petroleum.

The present low prices for petroleum and its products are due more to the over-production of 1914 than to the war, in the opinion of people in the industry. In 1914, production was 290,-178,538 barrels, the largest total ever shown for this or any other country in a single year. The production though far ahead of 1913, has a valuation of nearly $25,000,000 less than the year preceding 1914.

The latest compilations of war orders received by the United States and Canada since January 1, 1915, shows a total of above $500,000,000 in fully confirmed orders and about $1,000,000,000 in partly confirmed business. In the fully confirmed list, there is about $1,000,000,000 further orders, this means that at least $1,500,000,000, and possibly as much as $2,500,000,000 in guns, ordinance, torpedoes, shells, gunpowder, cartridges, vehicles for war use, horses, mules, harness, blankets, clothing, etc., for the use of the armies in Europe have been bought in this country and Canada in less than a year. Less than a quarter of this total have been shipped as yet, while much of the balance will be handled by the end of the current year.

Metal Market.

The copper metal market has been easier during the last week, with sales of 5,000 tons reported. Demand has been light, and . . . were not that nearly all of current production had been sold in advance, as well as that for a few weeks to come, it is probable that prices would have slumped sharply. As it is, leading interests are confident that there will be a large increase in demand before large supplies start to accumulate. This confidence is demonstrated at present is the heaviest in the history of the country, but production is also at a record-breaking pace. It is on the increasing finishing work on munitions of war, and with larger demand for commercial use, it is believed that consumption of copper will soon exceed even the tremendous production of the country and that a shortage of supplies will follow.

The steel market continues to improve, with further advances in prices for several products during the last week and with additional heavy buying. Specifications for steel products from July 1 to December 31, it is believed, will be several times as large as for six months in past years and as the largest for a few half years in the history of the industry. It is expected that the steel corporation will have $100,000,000 more unfilled orders on its books by the end of the year than at present. Next week, the report of the steel corporation for the second quarter of the year is looked for. Net of about $29,000,000 is looked for.

Wheat has probably been the chief buying-power being the cause of the drop. With more active and bulls taking profits, the high prices of the previous week could not be sustained. Corn, which was weak on the decline, but not enough to steady the market, also declined.

Cotton Eased Off.

The continued inability of cotton exporters to get sufficient exchange on difference with shipments has turned away a market which was active support for cotton in this market, and so even though foreign buying was good and prices were firm on the bull side, the market was a little easier during the last week.

WALL STREET DOMINATED BY WAR-SHARE TRADING

South and Southwestern Railways Make New Low Records During Week.

New York, July 24.—Spectacular trading in war shares marked the active week on the stock exchange, with many new high records in these issues. The extent of the dealings in these stocks was such as to completely divert operations in other parts of the list. Profit-taking served to reduce quoted values in most of these specialties, but the speculative mass purchases is to be renewed unless held in bounds by powerful interests.

Meantime railroads stocks suffered more or less severely, such issues as St. Paul and Canadian Pacific making lowest prices in many years, while others, particularly those in the southern and southwestern territories fell to lowest prices on record. Combining together the week's trading savored strongly of unreasoning speculation. Nothing in the week's trade in the division seemed to have substantial basis in actual business conditions.

The international situation assumed a new phase by the forwarding of the government's latest note to Germany.

Industrial conditions as reflected in the increased purchases of leading steel mills and higher prices for them out-show continued improvement. Unusual interest attaches to the publication next Tuesday of the report of the United States Steel Corporation for the second quarter of the year. The course of steel shares, which repeated their best price of the year, was accepted as a forerunner of this statement. Metal shares showed a hesitant tendency on diminished demand for refined copper.

WARNING AGAINST UNDUE ENTHUSIASM

Sensational Advances in War Specialty Group Will Recede on War Cessation or Labor Unrest.

New York, July 24.—The "war brides," the name that Wall street has given to the many more or less industrial shares which have benefited from recent or excessive war orders, the companies were said to have cleared from orders for army supplies for the account of the belligerents aforesaid—received a bad jolt this week when the director of the Republic Steel company made the flat statement that there was no reason for the company's present high selling records, and added that he did not see dividends for the stock for two years to come. It had advanced 33 points since May, last week's rise being 22 points.

The announcement from an inside source was quickly effective in forcing down this and other issues, but partial recovery later. The incident was helpful in directing attention to the flurry in the "war brides" generally, and the extent to which it had been overdone in many instances. Most of the issues which had risen sharply were affected, and there was general selling throughout the active industrial list. Such a setback was inevitable, for the advance in these shares had been carried to extremes, and the public was dangerously near being badly fooled.

Permanency Considered.

The incident set people to think, however, with the result that the markets last week were in a better position for what has taken place. Ever since the Kaiser's recent advance in Berlin Steel led speculators to reckon with the profits to be made in "war" shares traders have been figuring out higher dividends for industrials which have been in existence for years, but the bulk of the reports have come true. Others have not been confirmed yet. Still others have been proven to be without the slightest foundation. The whole movement has been greatly exaggerated doing service for shrewd insiders to have created large profits for them on the curb and on the regular exchange.

Under the circumstances, however, the market stood this test wonderfully well. The specialties as a rule declined but little. Some of the industrial shares have been conspicuously strong, as evidence of general buying in various quarters. Many people still think that the profits of war industries have not been discounted yet. This may be true in exceptional instances, but the fact remains that most of the rumors of great profits have been so greatly exaggerated as to be worthless. It is necessary for buyers to exercise the greatest caution in taking these stocks. The indications are that the bears in Wall street will have another boom in industrial shares as soon as it can be started. The big traders are planning for it already. The movement would probably be launched at once if it were possible to settle the dispute with Germany without further complications. Industrial shares are more in vogue today than they ever have been. This is due partly to the activity of the war period, and the feeling that the railroads can not prosper unless the country as a whole is put in a position to make it difficult for them to keep their heads above water. The situation could change quickly, however, should it be announced that the western roads had been given some increase in the interstate commerce commission.

Hait in Foreign Selling.

There has been a lull in the foreign liquidation of American securities. This was to be expected. It was the view of the heavy selling of the last three weeks and the fact that last Tuesday was the day for the half payments to the great British loan could be made. Some of the money will be paid with their way into the United States, although the American holdings will be reduced. It may be doubted whether many of the bonds will be held here for permanent investment. Europe will have to become accustomed yet to foreign bonds or to foreign stocks. There is not enough investment capital in the United States, although the American people have been heavily buying the Boer war period, but those were held only until the London market was ready sufficiently to show a fair profit. Then they were sold. Of the $250,000,000 bond and note issues sold to this market by belligerent and neutral nations since the war began, a relatively small portion were taken by individual investors. Most of them were held by the banks and financial companies. Even a 6 per cent return from a foreign government security is not attractive at a time when standing reached between employer and employed. The strike at the Bethlehem works led to some ugly rumors concerning carefully laid plans for arson in the manufactures and make it impossible for them to deliver the ammunition which the allies have called for. Because of the depressed industrial conditions, the many labor disturbances of late, and manufacturers had begun to feel that there would be no trouble on that score. But the sensational stories of large profits and runs of orders have made labor restive and disposed to ask for higher wage allowance. The next few months, therefore, are likely to see some interesting wage disputes unless the operations are deposed of through the ratification of new wage compacts.

Bankers Ponder World Finance.

Some of the most skillful bankers in the land are giving earnest study to the possible effect on the future war loans upon the investment markets of the world. Thus far the five great belligerents have borrowed $12,000,000,000 to carry on the war. Neutral countries, including Canada, have been called upon to help out the belligerents by furnishing the capital herein contained grave possibilities it had been pretty well discounted.

The fact that there was a seller during the forenoon emphasized the bearish sentiment which had developed in the trading element and induced more or less pressure from those who were not well informed near the close that Texas was selling sugar today for September delivery at less than tender basis. A notable increase in Texas receipts both at the interior and seaboard ports, and comment on the theory that cotton was being moved out to make room for the new crop, although recent liberal purchases on Texas cotton by spot houses for shipment to Russia would seem to furnish a more plausible reason for this increased movement.

The market opened steady at a decline of 4 to 6 points, influenced by weak cables and the absence of support, where selling was thought to have been encouraged mainly by the realization that would produce decided weakness on the side. There was practically no improvement during the day, and about the close, while steady, was 5 to 8 points net lower than the best prices of the early period, and the feeling that the realizations on cotton purchased

FARM LANDS.

THERE never was a time in the history of the south that cattle-feeding was more profitable than now. I have an ideal place for a stock farm—six acres, 2 miles of city limits of Gainesville, Ga., on fine, graded road; a beautiful east-front building site, large barn already on this place. The rear of this place lies beside Chattahoochee River, ¾ mile of Chattanoochee park and car line. It is a beautiful tract of cotton land, 450 acres open; mostly level and in cultivation; 75 acres under barbed wire fence. This can be bought at $9 per acre now. If you don't want a place, please don't take up my time and write me. Address H-141, care this and it will go at this price Dathan Jones, Gainesville, Ga.

212 ACRES, running right up in the town, near depot; 110 acres in cultivation. Produced last year 50 bales of cotton, 450 bushels of corn, 77 bushels of wheat, 850 bushels of oats, 150 to 200 bushels of potatoes, 30 large haystacks, 2,000 or more bundles of fodder, 100 bushels of peas, 100 gallons of syrup, $130 worth of cabbage on ¼ acre, besides other products. This farm is in middle Georgia, on the Atlanta and West Point railroad, in a county that is noted for its good productive lands; fronts the railroad for 1,200 feet right by depot. Postoffice surrounded by public roads. Owner has a good reason to sell, and will make a low price and easy terms. This property is well located. This is an opportunity that will not soon be offered you by a well-located farm. Thos. W. Jackson, Fourth National Bank building.

WATER POWER, corn and wheat mill; one of the best country stores in north Georgia. Cotton ginning and fronting the river, postoffice in store; 2-story, 9-room residence in good condition; one of the largest farms in the county; miller's house, gin house, mill house, blacksmith shop and other outbuildings; fine apple orchard in bearing; all kinds of fruit. 500 acres of this can make on this proposition from $3,000 to $5,000 per year. Owner has a good reason for offering to sell, and is making a very interesting price. Thos. W. Jackson, 4th Nat'l Bank Bldg.

TO SETTLE an estate, two nice little well-located farms, will be sold at less than half value. Must be cash. One is only 14 miles from Atlanta, 50 acres, worth $50 an acre; the other 82½ acres, good house and barn, practically new; double your money if farm going in the other tract is valley land, northwest Georgia, 40 acres, well improved; junction of two railways, $2,100. WAY TO PEACE POINTED BY MISS JANE ADDAMS

The New York Times publishes an interesting interview with Miss Jane Addams, recently returned from her survey of Europe as the American delegate of the Woman's Congress to the conference at The Hague.

Miss Addams says the women's mission was taken more seriously there than here. "We women delegates to the congress saw and were gravely and courteously received by men of real importance whom we went to see. We were not looked upon as meddlers; no one thought we were 'unsexed.'"

The Women's Peace Party, said Miss Addams, was accepted as something to be reckoned with by the press and the real men everywhere.

"While the militarists think of necessity out of the argument and the governmental groups are inevitably voiceless, no one is more impressed with the belief that probably all of the thinking civil population would welcome advances looking to some settlement, and that the most practical and acceptable advance would be some form of conference of neutrals guided by the United States. Personally, I am convinced that this is our really great opportunity and our undeniable duty.

"Should one, in the old sense, would be a failure. It would be impossible for any of the warring powers to accept an offer of the sort from us or anyone. But if the United States should call a conference of neutrals I believe the action would be welcomed.

"It is as certain that any government which asked us to act as a mediator would be sent by its own people as it is that any offer on our part to act as mediator would be rebuffed; but a continuous conference of neutral powers, standing ready to act at the first opportunity arose, might be of immense value.

"The pope told us that he would encourage the idea, and several men high in the official life of each of the warring nations expressed approval of the plan.

"Effective American work for the peace of the world, therefore, must mean the organization for the time of purpose of something bigger than yet has been planned, not designed to stop the present 'seeking war,' but to be ready at 'seeking war,' but to be ready at with effective help when Europe terminates this war. Such a conference might be a difficult thing for Europe to do if we, or someone, did not stand ready to offer assistance.

"We did not try to see the military people in any of the countries. Our efforts were to come in contact with the chancellors, the ministers of foreign affairs, members of the parliaments, etc. These we met in great numbers.

"An interesting point to me, at least, some what encouraging one is the fact that the pacifists are not a unit in any one set. Each a different type. In Germany they call themselves the Union for the New Fatherland. In England they call themselves the Union of Democratic Control, and in France there is rapidly organizing, and already shows signs of becoming the strongest of the English organization.

"None of these are definite pacifists. Longuet in Paris may be considered the leader, in this direction, of French thought.

"We found in this a definitely hopeful sign. It seemed a necessary and constructive movement unmistakably is growing out of the tremendous destruction which has been in progress.

"I consider it, too, an optimistic indication that women and their opinions are being taken very seriously throughout Europe without any relation whatsoever to the suffrage question. In a few of the warring countries, indeed, there was neither a suffrage nor a protest movement nor an esprit de corps of women, although in each there were individuals who espoused the cause.

"In every country we met women, some of them representing the cause of peace and some of them connected with the council of women, who are doing the research on the mission, for some women are as definitely upon the offensive as any set of men. They have been more able to do other than offer reproaches to the women who were endeavoring to further peace.

"But the gravity, even solemnity, with which men and women have regarded us and our mission was almost universal. Not a flippant word was spoken of the woman's peace movement, so far as I know, in all Europe while we were there; not once were we called meddlers. The distinction of thus designating us and of treating the movement with an amusing episode was reserved for certain American newspapers.

"This seems to me to indicate real progress, for I doubt if it has ever been admitted that such a movement was worth while but progress usually occurs through groups which see a situation and begin discussion. If there are enough men and women willing to face the situation as it is—a hard one to face—mostly unselfish and honest, daughters and sons are participating in the war, and whose lives continually are threatened by the shock and hysteria of resentment and belligerence; if there were fifteen hundred women willing to make the effort and bear the expense of time and money and worry to attend a conference in our deliberations, then something in the way of a real sentiment toward the ending of the war must be admitted to exist."

Miss Addams told many interesting incidents of how the war spirit is being fed daily by new resentments and production of those of one fighting nation upon the other side.

She closed her remarks by answering the question, "What should American women do, now, to help?" "I know, what that it seems to me to be their general duty to fix their minds upon the subject. It must be impressed upon their sensibilities that this slaughter has a terrible biological significance. I hope that every American woman will give thought to it. Every woman has a right to spend interest in it. Would not artists rise in strong revolt at sight of art works battered and destroyed? Life is of woman's making.

GIRL SCOUTS PLAN TO GO INTO CAMP FOR WEEK IN JULY

Plans for their annual camp at Warsaw are being made by the Girl Scouts of Savannah, who expect to go into camp the last of this month for a week or two.

Miss Edith Johnston, secretary, has charge of the arrangements and feels particularly fortunate in having, through the co-operation of the Registered Nurses' association, secured the interest of Mrs. George Drummond, who is a trained nurse, and who has consented to accompany the girls to Warsaw.

The list of girls is not yet entirely complete, and all others who intend to go are expected to turn their names in to Miss Johnston by the end of this week, as definite arrangements must be made for them. The cost per girl will be $5, and they are asked to bring this money to the secretary by next Monday.

Among those who will go are the Misses Rosalind and Madeline Gammon, Annie Graham, Marjorie Thomas, Rose Bobbidge, Margaret Craig, Gertrude Spellman, Elizabeth Owens, Edna Hamilton, Walker, Myrtle Massey and Margaret Fitzpatrick.

Miss Rosa Woodberry, who recently offered a scholarship in her school in Atlanta to Girl Scouts has extended to them the same privilege she had previously extended to the district and county schools, making the scholarship extend over four years. This will be an additional inducement to Girl Scouts to take advantage of the scholarship as a good student may have the advantage of schooling for four successive years.

DATE OF ANNUAL MEETING CHANGED.

At the request of the Hostess' club, the annual meeting of the State Federation of Women's Clubs, which is to be held in Savannah, has been changed to October 20, 27, 28 and 29.
MRS. Z. I. FITZPATRICK,
State President.

From Various Sources

Truly Feminine.

"Ladies," announced the president of an afternoon bridge club, "it has been moved and seconded that there shall be no conversation at the card tables. What shall we do with the motion?"

"I suggest," said a sprightly little blonde, "I suggest that we discuss it while we play."

Chance for Speculation.

The teacher of a night school was endeavoring to instill in the minds of some of the discouraged pupils some ambition.

"Do you know," he asked of a seedy looking boy, "that the boy who can't read and write has a chance for 10 cents."

"That so?" asked the seedy one reflectively. Then he added: "Say, I'll take my chance for 10 cents."

Elocution would have more value if, in addition to teaching us how to speak, it would teach us when.

From the Lay of the Last Anti.
(With apologies to the author of "Waverley.")

Breathes there the girl with soul so dark
Who ever lets herself remark:
This is my own, my native land!
Who when the day arrives to choose
Its rulers, reads election news.
If such there breathe, go have her told
A girl so cruelly bold,
Though fair she be, and good and kind,
Pure thoughts of heart, and clear her mind,
Must die, condemned by every tongue,
Unwept, unhonored and unsung.

SPLENDID GROWTH FOR FEDERATION JUNIOR LEAGUES

Leagues have recently been organized by Mrs. Amsden in Brunswick and in the tenth ward, Atlanta. In the Brunswick league 425 boys and girls enrolled, 88 high school pupils.

Education Extension Work

We hear much of the need of more field agents, more instructors to go about through the country teaching and demonstrating the things that stand for social and economic progress. In some instances criticisms have been made of the ones who have been sent out. It is the duty of government or state departments to know their representatives are efficient, trained workers. Take the woman who is to make a success of her work as teacher of household economics going among the thousands of women who are waiting to know what education and science can give them. Many qualifications are necessary for this woman; personality, high ideals of human life, standards, judgment, a scientific mind, and habits intelligently formed. She must not only understand what she teaches, but should realize its cultural and social possibilities, possess the capacity for leadership, and be able to secure the co-operation of those who are to learn of her.

No enterprise can be carried on to advantage unless it is based upon well-established principles and is systematized. The knowledge gained by experience and handed down from mother to daughter is, in the great majority of cases, the only guide which the housekeeper has in solving her food problems. Yet it is true that valuable as such empirical knowledge is, it is not sufficient for the requirements of the modern home. The progress which has been made in all that pertains to household work and home-making has not kept pace with what has been accomplished in commercial and other enterprises.

Miss Celeste Parrish, supervisor of Georgia's rural schools, urges that the colleges help in home economics extension work the same as in agriculture. She suggests that a four weeks' school be held in a dozen different sections of the state for training teachers in agriculture and home economics. The universities and normal schools should send out instructors for these schools. She urges that a new attitude is needed on the part of school people toward practical education.

The following report of the special committee on extension work at the conference for education was adopted:

"Extension work should include every form of effort by institutions of higher learning to confer their benefits upon the great mass of people who are not enrolled as students within their walls.

"Universities, colleges and normal schools should all engage in such work so far as their resources will permit. Tax-supported institutions are under peculiar obligations to carry on extension work, and the provisions made for their support should include liberal allowances for it.

"Unity in extension work is to be desired and indeed is necessary for any degree of success. To this end we recommend:

"That the state department of education and the land-grant college in each state agree upon a co-operative extension work to which all other agencies engaging in such work should conform.

"Public elementary schools afford probably the best opportunity for most of the lines of extension work, and universities, colleges and normal schools should send at their own expense trained and capable men and women to institutes and other gatherings of teachers and school patrons wherever possible, not merely for the purpose of trying to obtain students, but for the larger and better purpose of unselfish helpfulness to the people.

"In vocational training, especially that of agriculture and home-making, is the most available point of contact for the higher institutions and the elementary schools and people. Owing to the great lack of teachers able to do vocational work, we believe that no part of extension work should make special provisions for the training of the teachers now in the field in this work.

"In order to stimulate necessary local interest in vocational training, we believe that such training, including especially agriculture and home-making, should be recognized among the courses of study for high schools.

"We believe that good roads and co-operative marketing of farm products are of critical importance at this time to the farmers, and that land-grant colleges should establish the necessary departments to furnish experts to aid in the building of better roads and in the organization of the farmers into co-operative associations.

"We therefore recommend the appointment of a committee to investigate fully the whole question of extension work and to present at the time of a complete system of extension work for the communities of the south for consideration at the next meeting of this conference."

Feminist Movement History As Recorded in Literature

The feminist movement has aroused such universal interest that one is constantly finding new phases of its progress in order to be conversant upon the literature and drama of the present day.

Many books have been written upon the subject since the seventeenth century in England, when Mary Astell, who seems to have been the first feminine champion, wrote her letter concerning the literature of her time, published "A Serious Proposal to the Ladies for the Advancement and Improvement of Their Minds."

It was a century later, according to the Review of Books in The New York Times, in 1792, that Mary Wollstonecraft published her famous "Vindication of the Rights of Woman." Although Mary Astell's work is essentially a plea for equal education, it has always had the reputation of being the first herald of the woman's rights movement which began to take form about the middle of the eighteenth century. It was several decades before other books, such as "History of Woman," "Woman and Her Era," "The Great Lawsuit" and "Man v. Woman; Woman v. Man," the forty-fifth year, the thought and discussion of the day.

John Stuart Mills' "The Subjection of Woman," after a half century has not wrought more difference in the status of women than had a thousand previous books. Perhaps the most important statement of the reasons upon which the woman movement is based. The last decades of the nineteenth century saw a rapid increase in the work devoted to the discussion of all phases of the woman's rights movement. Prominent among these is the four-volume "History of Woman Suffrage," by Elizabeth Cady Stanton and several of her co-workers.

A list of the recently published work has been classified by the Times under the heads "Controversial," "History" and Philosophy," "Fiction," "Poetry and Drama."

While the bibliography is comprehensive, and much have the novels of the last few years been concerned with the "modern" woman, the business woman, the woman who wants to live her own life, the woman who, bent on working out an independent career, is brought hard up against mental problems and soul agonies that her foremothers knew nothing about, that the inclusion of feministic fiction it would have been impossible to make out half the novels that have been published in recent years.

Worked for Years to Secure Passage of Measure in Georgia.

With the thoughts that our system of education in Georgia must equal any in the land and that the school facilities for the children of the great constructive welfare movement the Daughters of the American Revolution have been working for the last few years to secure the passage of the compulsory education law in Georgia.

They have realized our Southern states still have the largest percentage of illiteracy in the United States, among the white population, and they have also remained through diligent study that the compulsory education system is the best.

Mrs. A. O. Harper, chairman of compulsory education, asked the state regent to allow her a place on this committee the regents of the 65 chapters in the state. This request was granted and by the concerted action of the committee every legislator has been approached.

Working hand in hand Mrs. Harper and Mrs. M. P. Jackson, chairman of the general education committee of the Federation of Women's Clubs, has drawn up a bill which has been introduced. The Federation also has endorsed this bill their most hearty endorsement.

No work of the D. A. R. of Georgia is more worthy of consideration and the beginning of trying to secure a compulsory education law is largely due to them.

Four bills have already been introduced in the house and probably the good features of all will be consolidated and it is earnestly hoped that the passage of this consolidated bill will be unanimous.

It is important to the county school superintendents, Professor M. L. Brittain, state superintendent, urged their active co-operation in securing the passage of the compulsory education bills.

Gov. John Milledge Chapter Arranges School for Girls' Canning Club of Whittield

Under the direction of the Governor John Milledge chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution, of Dalton, the Girls' Canning club of Whitfield county was given on last week four days of canning, domestic science and household economics training.

A recently remodeled building on the principal business street was donated by Mr. John Brown, and was gaily decorated in bunting and flags. The subject of sanitation was stressed, and in the kitchen was carried out in every practical detail.

Forty girls were entertained in the different homes, and all through the course Mrs. Brown served lunch at cost and profit to each member enrolled.

The chapter's work, planned by the regent, Mrs. Paul Jones Brown, and chairman of educational committee, Mrs. Hollis Bailey, was most successful and successfully carried out. Different clubs of the city were invited to participate in the work.

On the first day the D. A. R.'s were in charge, and Mrs. Brown, demonstration agent, gave canning demonstration from 8 to 12 o'clock.

Sewing and cooking from 10 to 12.

After the dinner, which was demonstrated by different clubs, Miss Mary Lee Huff entertained the girls with a delightful story hour.

The second day was in charge of the Reviewers' club. Cooking was demonstrated by Mrs. Harlan, Mrs. Steed, Mrs. Judd and Mrs. Cox. Mrs. Steed and Miss Aline Anderson, a graduate of Central High school, Atlanta, gave a story hour by Miss Buchols added greatly to the day.

The last day was in charge of the United Daughters of the Confederacy and completed the week's work. A delicious menu was arranged and demonstrated. Miss Janice Wafer gave delightful readings during the rest hour.

Miss Bowden, state club agent, was present on Friday to assist in the work.

The girls' pleasure was in no way overlooked. The First National bank and the Crescent theatre treated the girls to the "movies" and auto rides and on the ice cream parlors were in evidence, and everything was done for their pleasure.

Many liberal contributions were given toward the upkeep of the school. The people of Whitfield county take the spirit of unity grow between the town and country people, and feel proud of the step the D. A. R. have taken, which meant to every girl what a short term in Athens would.

GEORGIA U. D. C. TO HELP ELLEN WILSON MEMORIAL

Mrs. W. W. Smith, chairman the Ellen Wilson Memorial, Inc., Atlanta, Ga.—My Dear Mrs. Elkin: Thank you for the opportunity given the U. D. C. in indorsing the Ellen Wilson Fund for the Christian Education of Mountain Youth.

"The United Daughters of the Confederacy in Georgia have already manifested appreciation of the need of such work by their investment of $1,000 in Rabun county lands, at Rabun Gap, a fertile farm county, the income from which is to go toward the education of the whites in the mountain regions, which is to be found the purest Anglo-Saxon representatives our nation boasts.

"Education, the dearest treasure modern times affords, is long conceded to be the best memorial, and therefore it gives me very great pleasure to advocate this plan for honoring the wife of a great and good Georgian woman in a way that shall sing her praises to unborn millions in centuries to our dear land. Yours very cordially,

PRESIDENT GENERAL SENDS A MESSAGE TO U. D. C. MEMBERS

My Dear Daughters: It is my great disappointment to have to tell you that a letter from Mrs. A. H. White, director general, and a letter from Mrs. A. L. C. Hall, secretary, inform me that Rabun Gap stone cornerstone laying of Shiloh monument Chapter, in connection having been decided upon by the central committee, Mrs. Hall, the president general has anticipated with pleasure the occasion of the Shiloh monument cornerstone laying according to the plans of the Shiloh committee received by her, which have been approved by that convention. She knows that your disappointment is also great. As time conflicts and a good Atlanta Francisco convention, my mind naturally turns to transportation and hotels. I have received many letters asking the route I shall take, so I give it to you here. Mr. Tift, one of the little tours, Raleigh, N. C., is going to take a special U. D. C. train to San Francisco, giving a reasonable rate and splendid accommodations. This train will be personally conducted, and I am altogether pleased with the arrangements, which will give me many very interesting places. If you desire any further information about the trip, please communicate with Mrs. Charles Gattis, Gattis Tours, Raleigh, N. C.

Of this we are all good Georgians let us have a regular whirlwind campaign for the next year. Remember, I must. Let us pay Arlington before we do anything else.

With love building, faithfully,
DAISY M'LAURIN STEVENS.

DEPARTMENT OF HOME GARDENS

Edited by BEAUFORT MATHEWS.

HASTINGS MONEY PRIZE IS WON BY SAM PASKO

Has Shown Most Active Spirit in the Home Garden League.

Sam Pasko, a bright lad of 14 years and a member of the second grade Boys' High school, has met with continued success in his garden at the Hebrew home, where he has been made the chairman of the squad workers for the Atlanta Home Garden league. Sam gave the Hastings seed to 240 youngsters in the Fraser street school in 1914 and was the direct means of holding their interest for that season.

Sam appealed to Mrs. R. A. Sonn, superintendent of the Hebrew home, for land, which he was gladly given. He immediately organized twenty-five boys into squad workers and allotted each a miniature garden, encouraging successful work. Not one time in securing his share of seed, being given at that time by Mr. J. E. Hastings to the members of the Atlanta Home Garden league, and with the help and co-operation of the city Federation and Miss Beaufort Mathews, he kept the active interest of these boys until snow covered the ground. Even this did not discourage Sam. He got his father and mother to plow and drew garden plans for the next spring, "hoping," he said, "that some one would give us seed again."

Sam has won the $5 money prize offered for the boy or girl who has shown the most active spirit in the home garden league. He has also carried the spirit of gardening to many boys in the neighborhood and he is going to try and help other boys who have land enough to plant a lettered.

Winner of Cup.

"Sam Pasko" is engraved twice on The Constitution loving cup for successive gardening.

If he wins the third time he will be proud possessor of a handsome cup offered by Mrs. Hastings to the youngest gardener in the league.

HOME GARDEN CALENDAR FOR THE YOUNG FOLKS

Sun. 25—Talk about your garden to members of your Sunday school class. Get the boys and girls to take an interest in their gardens. Others are doing in the league. Begin a garden Monday for August.

Mon. 26—Run down and see some good seed man. Have a talk with him and select seed for the early fall garden.

Perhaps he has some plants ready for immediate transplanting.

Tues. 27—Have you a lettuce bed? Plant lettuce for immediate use. Water your garden with your hose?

Wed. 28—Weed your garden in the cool of the mornings.

Pull all tools out and do not let it drop in the garden. Rotted fruit makes the soil sour and causes trouble with the plants.

Thurs. 29—Mow your lawn and mulch the ground around your potatoes with the grass that you rake up. This grass mulch will hold the moisture.

Fri. 30—Are you getting your beets?

Tomatoes should bring a good price.

Go down to the farmers' and see what vegetables are selling for this week and price yours accordingly.

SELLING TOMATO WORMS, ATHENS GIRL GETS $5.00

Mrs. Lyman Amsden, in visiting the Junior Civic league over the city, made an interesting discovery in Athens, and, now, she knows how.

One little girl, who, it seems, is an interested gardener, had a fine crop of tomato worms. She was asked quite a great deal upon the subject by older brothers and friends, so she carried her troubles to an old negro uncle on the place who was a famous fisherman.

"What do you do to get rid of tomato worms, Uncle Rastus, asked the little gardener in perplexity.

"Huh!" grunted Uncle Rastus, scratching his head, "Tomato worms is de bes' bait er fisherman kin git, but you gwar allus git 'em, honey. Now, I likes fish, an I sells all de fishes what I kin ketch, but I ain't gwine buy de worms what fishes dat I ketch. I'kin buy de worms from a nigger now, when I needs 'em."

A bargain was quickly made with the little gardener found that by selling bait for worms she had found a way to clear $5 in a very short time, and began to look upon her life and work as good bread fruit.

In the meantime she sprayed her plants with arsenate of lead, under the formula given in the home garden columns last summer, and even got ten direct from the experiment station.

SUBMARINE TERROR SHIPPING TERRORIZED

Even the pen of Jules Verne never dared such fiction as has been recorded with the submarine in the eastern Atlantic—unbelievable, but true, nevertheless, are the exploits of these modern Nemos, the negro uncle living in the green, opalescent depths of the ocean, and doing his share in the noble ships of commerce as well as armed ships of the line.

Scores of ships but what brought the news of a new victim of this terrible, hidden foe of the naval warfare—the terror of the submarine grays the hair of many a gallant skipper as he sees the distant menace is scarcely less dreadful than the continual daily and nightly watching.

Maneuvering beneath the ocean swell with its single baleful eye almost dimmed by the spray, the submarine, with each wave, the viper-like crait steals up behind its victim. She has picked quite a number of these unlighted and inoffensive, fires, and then swiftly backs away to avoid the terrific impact and upheaval of water caused by the mischievous messenger of destruction. It never misses its each time.

The question as to whether the German submarine blockade of Britain constitutes a true blockade according to international law can be answered by each one of those who ponder over the details of the appalling European struggle in "The Nations at War," the great book of the day published by Willi J. Abbot.

Under special arrangement The Constitution secured a share of the first edition of this fair, impartial, unbiased history, and is presenting it to its readers. Since the recent opening of the subscription books thousands of these most excellent books have left our hands for the homes of our readers, and the words of commendation and praise both for the book and for the plan of presenting it to the public by its readers for one coupon and 98 cents, the mere fraction of the expense incidental to publication, have been pouring in. Any Constitution reader who has not yet secured a set should see if this opportunity should lose no time in calling for the volume.

WHEN YOU DROOP IN THE MORNING

It Means an Afternoon Headache and an Evening of Misery.

There is no necessity for it. The morning droop means the afternoon headache, the evening misery means inefficiency in the office or in the store—that you are worth less to yourself or your employer.

You know what causes that droop. If you don't, you ought to. It is indigestion eating or drinking or both; or it may come from nervous habits or habits or lack of exercise. Any one of these may cause constipation and create toxic poisons, which attack and injure the vital organs.

Stop it now. You can do it and prevent it future. When you get up in the morning take Jacobs' Liver Salts.

Just a small dose of it—one to two teaspoonfuls—in a generous glass of water. You will find it a bubbling, sparkling, pleasant drink, and you can go to work with a quick step and a keen, clear mind and nerves.

If you take calomel, it will take you a day to get over it. There is a day lost in addition to the undermining effect of this dangerous and powerful drug which soon must have serious and deleterious effect upon the system.

Jacob's Liver Salt will do what most needs to be done, and in the most gentle and delightful way— no pain or griping. 25c, at Jacobs and druggists generally.

The Housekeeper's Council Table

A Page of Practical Talks On the Home, Conducted by Dorothy Dolan

Heart to Heart Chat by Vivian

GO BACK, if you will, please, aided by memory, to your own sweet childhood days. They were happy, oh, so happy, notwithstanding the simple cottage or even humbler farmhouse in which you were born and spent at least part of your girlhood. Those simple gingham frocks and blue calico aprons were in tune, they increased the charm and beauty of those simple surroundings.

There were splendid riches in those days, because you were not only one selfish and lonely child. There were half a dozen or at least that number of older and younger brothers and sisters. What a splendid crew of jolly youngsters you all were together. Yes, every last one of you, including big brother Bill, Tom and George, against Helen, Kate, Alice and perhaps Louise. What splendid pals you all were together. You smile as I call you pals and you remember the daily feuds in which two at least and sometimes the whole six and seven were engaged in one deadly encounter. These were merely passing differences, and you came out better and stronger friends. You could not keep all your toys, and when you outgrew your pretty frocks and coats they were passed down to the younger children. You need not worry about this incident, because the younger children were happily awaiting their splendid heritage.

Toys of Childhood.

No less was true of the books and the toys. When you finished reading your fairy tales, your "Robinson Crusoe," Dickens and George Eliot, they were not stowed away in the nursery closet or in the garret, never to be used again. In spite of the marked passages and folded corners they were enjoyed by one and all. The marked passages you made were an indication of joy to the younger children as they read and enjoyed the same things that you had read and enjoyed a year or two before.

It was all true of the building blocks, dolls, tin soldiers and mechanical toys. They were used and enjoyed by one and all. When you played snow balls, climbed fences and coasted downhill on a small sled or on a large tobogran it was not one lonely child trying to amuse itself alone. It was a live, large, lusty crew, whose numbers grew daily through the assistance of cousins and friends.

You six or seven were a great responsibility to father and promised plenty of work for mother, but they did not seem to mind as long as you were well and happy. Why should they have minded, for they shared and enjoyed your pleasures with you. Although mother's days were crowded with toil, keeping all her darlings clean and the house in order, she found plenty of time to play with you indoors and out. If you recall the stories that are dearest to you now and are still fresh in your memory you will see that those were the favorite stories mother told you time and again when you were a child. Father had to hustle to keep the boys in shoes and stockings, which wore out so rapidly, and to get new frocks for the girls, which they seemed to outgrow overnight.

Parties Were Rare.

There were not parties and celebrations day in and day out, but when they came they were planned with care and were so delightful that they were not easily forgotten. You might have forgotten most of these facts altogether if it were not for the older people, who love to tell of the days when they were young. Look now into your own daily existence. The halls are lonely and the large, well equipped nursery is bare. There is not a child's happy voice to be heard. Yes, there comes one little, sullen miss or perhaps two quarreling boys worried and fretting to death because they lack companionship of brothers and sisters. They get tired of their own companionship and the neighbor's child cannot be with your own little darlings all the time.

Somehow you tire of the nursery and your lovely home no less quickly than does your child. Your household responsibilities are easily taken care of and most of your recreation is enjoyed outside of your large and attractive home. You are cheating yourself no less than your own child of her natural heritage. You are eager to keep young for many years and you hope that the bloom will not readily fade from your lovely face. Remember that God has covered the earth with flowers and grass so that it will ever be young and He expects you to fill your home with happy, loving children for the same purpose. This is the privileges of motherhood, the richest heritage the world knows and shall ever know. Grasp it before it is too late.

On These Hangers the Dainty Dresses Are as Well Preserved as at Home.

Much of Your Pleasure Depends Upon the Attention Given to This Preliminary Work and You Can Scarcely Give It Too Much Time.

By DOROTHY DOLAN.

HAVE you ever known a woman who planned her vacation with exquisite care? She knew weeks ahead where she was going; she bought and made herself the prettiest and most modish kind of summer frocks. In spite of all this thought and effort her summer outing was only half a success, because she did not have the right kind of trunks and she did not understand the art of packing those she had.

I have seen more than one woman put twice as much in a trunk as it could possibly hold, and, notwithstanding that she punched the clothes down deep into the trays and sat on the lid of the trunk, she had the pleasure of repacking the trunk before it could be completely closed.

Packing Easily Learned.

However splendid the trip you have planned and anticipated may be it will lose much of its charm and pleasure if you go through any such experience as I have described. It does not take genius to learn the art of packing a trunk easily and quickly, but it does take some common sense and reflection.

You may boast of having packed your trunk successfully at the eleventh hour; if this happens put it down to chance and not to good judgment.

If you have the old-fashioned type of trunk, the more need of your packing it carefully. A day before setting to work you had better take your dresses and suits out of closets and look them over for repairs. This will save you just so much time and labor when you start off on your holiday.

Give each dress a careful brushing and assort them. By doing this you will weed out those you do not actually need, which means that either they will go back into a packing trunk or into your closets.

Be sure to put the heavy things at the bottom. If it is possible, put forms in all your shoes, and should you not have enough keep those you have for your low shoes and handsome evening slippers.

You can either buy or make shoe backs of cretonne or colored linen. The prettiest are trimmed with a bit of hand embroidery. A simple substitute for bags is silk tissue paper. Be sure to wrap your bottles in some old chemise or anything soft. Likewise put your raincoat, books and umbrellas at the bottom.

Heavy Garments Next.

The heavy coats and skirts come next. Fold your skirts where they will not show the crease, providing your trunk is not a full skirt length. This is readily done by folding back the part above the hip line. You will surely crease your skirts by folding them down the center. It goes without saying that the heavy skirts should rest at the bottom and the light, soft ones on top or in one of your trays.

The waists to your dresses and the blouses are to be put into a separate tray or trays. If you want good waists to keep their shape, fill the neck and sleeves with tissue paper; you need not pack it tight. These waists will stay clean and be kept from getting mussed by covering them with a small sheet of linen or cretonne. A few sheets of silk paper make a fairly good substitute. Keep the small side trays for hats, scarfs, gloves and handkerchiefs. You will do well to lay your gloves and delicate scarfs in bags or in handkerchief and glove cases.

Since hats are either large or of a peculiar shape, it is well to have a hat trunk. Because if you do not need the entire trunk for hats the space left over can be utilized for shoes and odds and ends.

Whether you pack your hats into the old-fashioned trunk or have a special trunk for them, give as much care to them as you do to your dresses. A good arrangement is to lay the large hats below and the small and flimsy ones on top. The only way to keep the hats firm is by pinning them to the cushions with a number of cheap hatpins. By pinning them firm they will be protected from any amount of jarring they may get.

Hat Trunk Convenient.

If you are making a trip for a week or two you can use a hat trunk as a good substitute for a large trunk or a more modern innovation trunk. The upper tray can be utilized for blouses and outing skirts. You can slip the shoe bags into the corners without spoiling your hats by exercising a little care.

Still, if you want to travel in real comfort, enjoy the wardrobe trunk of the most improved kind. It will save you a great deal of time and worry when it comes to the packing and unpacking, because you are always packed. You will not worry about closet room when you reach a summer hotel where the rooms are none too large and the closet room is less. This type of trunk is so good looking it is almost as much an ornament as it is a matter of comfort and convenience.

If you decide to travel with a wardrobe trunk, do not have it too large; they are hard to handle and are extremely clumsy when placed in a small bedroom. A steamer innovation should be large enough if you are alone; you will need it a little larger if you want it to contain the children's belongings as well as your own.

Hangers for Gowns.

The body part of this trunk is fitted up with hangers and folders so that the gowns are hung and laid in the most convenient way. The blouse and skirt of the same costume are hung close together. There is a nickel rack for the one piece dresses and they can stay there weeks at a time without being mussed. In this sort of trunk you can pack your gowns very closely without any fear of their getting crushed.

Compartment for Shoes.

The best equipped of these have a compartment below in which you can pack three or four pairs of shoes and slippers. Then there are two large drawers, one for handsome waists and the other for your best underwear. There is a large deep drawer with an adjustable cushion for hats and smaller ones for jewelry and other finery. It is hard to think of any chiffonier or set of drawers as convenient as your wardrobe trunk. Besides, you have no dread of suffering from an awful backache every time you do your packing and your unpacking.

Talks for the Girl Who Works

YOU may be extremely practical about everything that pertains to your daily work and still use poor judgment when it comes to arranging affairs of the home and your social life. If you have this shortcoming it may not mar your career as a business woman, but it will certainly tell on your health and your nerves in time.

By being practical I mean that you should get up in time to dress leisurely and not tumble into your clothes. Worse still, to make a desperate effort to eat a hearty breakfast of eggs, toast and coffee all in the limited space of five minutes. The dilatory girl has calculated her time so poorly that even with this amount of scrimping she is compelled to run all the way to work or at least that distance she walks after she leaves the car.

This type of girl is equally short-sighted in making her business and social engagements. Of course, like other girls she has her luncheon engagements during the week, and plans to enjoy a Saturday half-holiday with some good friend. One of two things is sure to happen. Though she knows that she has a poor memory, she makes no effort to strengthen it, nor to record her engagements on a pad or in an engagement book.

Therefore she never thinks of her promise to meet her friend at luncheon or at the matinee until a day or two later.

When she does not forget an engagement she calculates poorly. She always selects those days for social recreation when she knows that her work is going to be heaviest. What happens? Just what always happens to this type of girl. She has to break her engagement at the last moment, which means a real disappointment to herself and to her friend. Much the same thing happens when she accepts an invitation for dinner or for theater. Instead of taking a night at the end of the week, it must be Monday or Tuesday when the work has been the heaviest during the day.

This type of girl is as extravagant with money as she is with the expenditure of her leisure hours. To use a bit of slang "money burns a hole in her pocket." She lets it go in driblets and when the time comes when she really has need of something worth while she has nothing set aside for that purpose. To be sure she knows that she can open up a savings account or get a small bank with little effort, but she has never exerted herself to the point of making this venture.

What more can you expect of this type of business woman than that she has as little judgment in apportioning money as time. She refuses to reckon what she can afford for her luncheons and simple amusements at the beginning of the week and long before the next week's pay day arrives she is "dead broke." She really intends to lay aside some money every week for pretty summer clothes and a fortnight's holiday, but when the time comes to do the things she really wants to do she has not half enough left.

She does not seem to realize that to be honest and fair with others you should be so with yourself. This means to take account of your time and money and learn to apportion both. It may seem an effort at first, but by exerting yourself a little you will soon find that you will save yourself much futile worry and have plenty of time and money for yourself and for your friends.

Hints for Housekeepers

WHEN eggs crack—When they crack in boiling, add a teaspoonful of salt to the water. The white will not come through and be wasted.

Airy cupboard—All cupboards and wardrobes need frequent airing to be healthy. Remove all clothes and open wide on a sunny day, and leave so for several hours each week.

A saving in gas—Take a large sheet of tin and place it over the burner. This will keep several saucepans boiling.

Kid gloves—To renovate black kid gloves at small cost mix a few drops of black ink with a teaspoonful of olive oil. Apply this with a feather and dry in sun.

Cleaning brooms—They will last twice as long if they are given an occasional soaking. Dry in the open air and always stand with the heads upward.

Caring for the Baby

MOTHER, if you want to give your child a good, honest start in life, you will feed your child at the breast. Physicians are of the opinion that nature's way of giving the child nourishment is the safest and best way. If you decide to nurse your own baby, nurse it regularly by the clock and see it gets nothing but water between feeding time.

Most babies thrive best if the intervals between feeding time are rather long. The interval may be six hours until the milk is established. From that time on feed the baby at three-hour intervals until it is six months old, then you can make the intervals four hours each. Your baby should not be fed longer than twenty minutes at a time.

If you are unable to feed the baby through the entire nine or ten months in which milk is the main diet, be comforted by the thought that you have at least given your child a good start. The only proper artificial food is cow's milk, modified to suit the child's age and development. If your baby has been nursed for a time and you put it on cow's milk, it is well to give it a somewhat weaker mixture at first than the one indicated for her age.

The food can be strengthened every few days until it suits your child's age. Some babies have peculiarities and with them rules can not always be followed, but for most children regular rules should be followed from the start and there will be little trouble later on.

Whenever there are indications that the milk disagrees with the baby it should be diluted. Give nothing but a little plain boiled water until you or the doctor sees fit.

Be sure to clean the bottles every time you fill them. New bottles should be annealed by placing them to boil for twenty minutes. Allow them to stay in the water until it is cold. Bottles treated thus will not break readily when filled with boiling water or when the food is being cooked in them.

Each bottle should be emptied as soon as the baby has finished nursing. Then rinse with cold water and let it stand and fill with water until the bottles for the day have all been used. At a convenient time scrub all the bottles with hot soap suds, using the bottle brush on the inside.

REVIEW WHEAT MARKET BY THE MODERN MILLER

"A very small percentage of the winter wheat crop was threshed this week, as a few favored localities threshers were able to work, but in general the wheat is still standing or in the shock drying out. More activity is expected next week. Rainfall has been in Nebraska, Kansas, northern Oklahoma, northern and central Illinois, Missouri and Ohio. In Illinois, Indiana and Kentucky the crop is rapidly drying out. Kansas had heavy rains and local flooding of fields. Uncut wheat in many low fields has been abandoned.

"First run wheat is tough, but receipts are rapidly improving in quality. In Texas the crop is two-thirds threshed and in dry condition, selling at $1.05 to $1.07 on farms, some going to elevation for export. Texas farmers will hold fully one-half of their crop."

NEW COLLECTION PLAN FOR NEW YORK BANKS

By R. K. Berrien, Jr.

In connection with an announcement by the management of the New York Clearing House association, it is interesting to recall that Atlanta was the second city in the country to adopt the out-of-town system of collecting checks.

Boston was the pioneer city of the country to adopt the system, and some ten years ago, the Atlanta clearing house appointed a committee to investigate the idea of collecting country checks by the association, instead of each city bank forwarding their outside checks by direct and indirect routes over the country for collection, all banks should send daily to the collection department of the clearing house its outside checks, to be forwarded in bulk direct to the drawee points, resulting in the saving of postage, reduced exchange costs and special handling by the city banks and the drawee banks.

Atlanta Adopted In 1909.

The committee of he local clearing house made a thorough investigation and study of the Boston plan, but because of certain objections at first, the system was not put in operation until 1909—Atlanta being the second city in the country to adopt the system.

Since that time Kansas City, Chattanooga, Macon, Nashville and other cities of the country have adopted the plan, and the final adoption by New York—probably now the world's greatest financial center—is conclusive evidence as to the merit of the system.

New York Now Adopts Plan.

The clearing house committee in New York has had the plan under advisement some time, and have deferred the inauguration of same, thinking that the federal reserve bank of New York would establish the collection feature, as contemplated by the federal reserve act, but doubtless the metropolitan banks are reluctant to suffer from the present cumbersome methods and are willing themselves and the economical saving, in point of both expense and time, long ago adopted by Atlanta, Boston and other progressive banking centers.

The New York Clearing House's Announcement.

"In deciding to act on the recommendation that a new house committee and a foreign department be established for the collection of out-of-town checks, the Clearing House association has taken a step of far-reaching importance. The principle to country checks handled by the New York banks. This will work a radical change in the routes which checks in process of collection now take, and will assist to restore to New York its former prominence as a financial center. At the same time it will have the contrary effect on such places as Albany, which have attracted accounts away from New York banks by reason of the fact that in those cities were willing to make collections at par, while in New York they have exacted a charge on all items drawn on banks in certain other cities and certain leading states.

"Elements of the transit problem have long recognized that its only solution consisted in the organization of a special department in the city charged with the clearing of country bank checks. Ever since the personal check has displaced to a large extent the bank draft as a medium of payment in distant points, the question of who should bear the cost of collection has been a bone of contention between the city and the country banks. It has been generally agreed that the expense of collection ought in all justice be paid by the owner of the check, although heretofore the burden has been shifted to the city banks, with whom the checks are first deposited for collection, and it has been aggravated by the extravagant charges exacted by country bank correspondents, which have found in the charges a very attractive source of income. Furthermore, driven by the keen competition for country bank accounts the city banks have been compelled to allow immediate credit to the depositors of the checks, and pay interest on uncollected funds.

"In the attempt to remedy the evil the city banks began some years ago to exact a charge from their customers who deposited the checks, to defray the cost of collection. In this the New York banks were pioneers. But the attempt has only given rise to another evil. Banks in some countries have declined to impose similar charges on their depositors and the result has been a flagrant misrouting of checks. Instead of being sent by the most direct routes to the drawee banks, itreme are rewarded by roundabout ways with the idea of avoiding all points where collection charges are exacted. Thus checks frequently remain uncollected for days, and in the meantime the city collecting bank allows the depositors interest in the amount of the checks.

"The organization of the country check clearing will remedy the evil for the New York banks by greatly reducing the cost of check collection. Checks received in one day by all the members of the clearing house on an outside bank will be sent in one package, and the outside bank will be able to remit to all by one inclosure. There will thus be a saving to all concerned in postage, stationery, clerical work and the collection of the checks will be greatly expedited."

COTTON GOODS MARKET SHOWS IMPROVEMENT

New York, July 24.—Some improvement was noted in the demand for cotton goods this week and as the fall season approaches it becomes more settled selling agents believe the movement will become active. Bleached goods prices were revised downward on some of the well-known brands for jobbing purchases and larger orders are being sought for advance delivery. Wide sheeting prices remain unchanged on the same selling basis that of last season. A number of openings of wash fabrics, white goods and fine novelty cottons took place.

The attendance of buyers of dress fabrics has been very large in the market. As yet they are operating cautiously, but fully as well as a year ago in some of the largest houses. Print cloths were steadier and some substantial late contracts were entered. Duck for export continues in good demand and there is some improvement in the call for duck for domestic use. Hug manufacturers are reaching their limit both for sheeting and osnaburgs to take the place of burlaps and there is some selling above that of last season. A number of openings of wash fabrics, white goods and fine novelty cottons took place.

"In the district between Pultusk and the Vistula since July 14, fourteen cannon and ninety machine guns have been captured. The quantity of war material taken cannot yet be estimated. Before the army in front of the Narew have captured in the last few days 2,600 prisoners and two machine guns.

GORIZIA CAPTURED BY THE ITALIANS?

Persons Arriving at Milan Report That the Austrian Stronghold Has Fallen After Hard Fighting.

Geneva, July 24.—(Via Paris.)—A dispatch to the Tribune from Milan says:

ITALIANS FEARFUL OF AUSTRIANS CLAIM.

Vienna, July 24.—(Via London.)—The Austrian war office has issued the following in regard to operations on the Italian front:

"The battle in the Gorizia district has begun. Throughout the yesterday evening on the heights of Podgora a new attack was started against the Austrian bridgehead, but it was immediately stopped by our artillery.

"Our troops counter attacked and threw the enemy back completely.

"On the southern part of the Doberdo plateau the Italian attacks were weaker and less frequent and completely ceased at night. Renewed attempts of the enemy to attack on the front Polazzo-Vermegliano were edsily stopped. Yesterday morning near Selz the enemy penetrated part of our trenches on the edge of the plateau. At night, however, we counter attacked and captured all the former positions and repulsed the enemy on the whole line. SOUTHERN ELIMINATES MANY GRADE CROSSINGS

Danville, Va., July 24.—(Special.)—In connection with the double track work which it has had under way in Virginia and North Carolina during the past fiscal year on 102.4 miles of its Atlanta-Washington line, Southern railway has eliminated 54 out of 73 grade crossings. By the building of underpasses twenty were eliminated, by overhead bridges nineteen and by changing the direction of public highways, fifteen. The nineteen which remain are so located as to make their elimination practically impossible or they involve prohibitive damages to abutting property.

In all construction work involving the relocation of and straightening of its lines the fixed policy of Southern Railway company is to separate all important highway crossings of the revised lines wherever practicable. Though this policy means large additional expense, such expense is undertaken as a permanent investment for safety.

Southern railway has two co-operated with municipal and county authorities in the elimination of many dangerous crossings on others of its lines throughout the south. It has devoted to work of this character as much as its resources and other obligations make possible, and President Fairfax Harrison has announced that this policy will be continued.

NO SEPARATE PEACE POSSIBLE FOR TURKEY

Geneva, Switzerland, July 24.—(Via Paris.)—Nedjeladen Effendi, the Turkish minister of justice, and Fazeon Effendi arrived yesterday at Lausanne from Berlin. Fazeon Effendi has entered a hospital.

The Turkish journal here today stated that the story published here and also in London to the effect that Nedjemkaden Effendi and Fazeon Effendi came to Switzerland as representatives of the government with the object of opening pourparlers for a separate peace with the triple entente is untrue.

"Even if she wished to, Turkey cannot make a separate peace," declared the consul.

Supreme Court Clears Way For Draining of Swamps

State Drainage Law Held Constitutional in Opinion Handed Down in Case of Almand v. Pate.

The supreme court of Georgia has handed down an opinion holding as constitutional the drainage law of Georgia, enacted in 1911, which means that thousands of acres of swamp lands, valued at millions of dollars, may now be reclaimed and added to the wealth of the state and the productivity of her resources.

The opinion was handed down in the case of Almand et al. v. Pate et al., appealed on questions of constitutionality from the western circuit.

It is said that much of the land affected by this decision is of such a character that when properly drained it will produce 100 bushels of corn to the acre, and that the resultant productivity of the land will defray the expense of drainage in a very short while.

Hayes Creek Drainage.

In the present case the Hayes creek drainage district had been established in Gwinnett county.

Commissioners were proceeding to collect assessments for the purpose of draining the land, when A. J. Almand and T. O. McElroy, owners of property in the district, instituted an action against the commissioners and the tax collector to enjoin them from the collection of the assessment on the ground, among others, that the act of 1911, providing for the creation of drainage districts and the work of drainage, was unconstitutional. The defendants demurred, and it was finally agreed upon that questions of estoppel and constitutionality be submitted to the court, excluding all other questions. The matter was heard before Judge Bell, of Gwinnett superior court. Judge Bell ruled the act valid and the plaintiffs excepted.

The opinion, by Justice Atkinson, holds that "the validity of the enactment rests in the police power of the state."

Referring to the exceptions, the opinion says:

"It is also said that the act falls under no provision of the constitution authorizing the levy of an assessment upon private property without the consent of the land owner, and that it is a violation of article 1, section 1, paragraph 2, of the constitution, which declares 'Protection to person and property is the paramount duty of government, and shall be impartial and complete.' The validity of the enactment rests in the police power of the state. By reference to section 2 of the act, it appears that the law is not intended to apply unless, among other things, 'public benefit, or utility, or the public health, convenience or welfare will be promoted by drainage, ditching or leveeing the land.

Principle of Public Benefit.

"It thus appears that the act is founded on the principle of public benefit."

Another attack upon the act was upon the ground that it was in conflict with article 7, section 7, paragraphs 1 and 2, of the constitution, restricting the amount of debt that may be incurred in counties, municipalities or divisions without the consent of two-thirds of the qualified voters.

The opinion says:

"Under this ground of attack it is insisted that the statute amounted to an unauthorized attempt to empower the commissioners to issue bonds, which, in effect, without the sanction of two-thirds of the voters at an election duly held, amounted to the creation of a debt. Under the terms of the drainage act the bonds which it is provided the drainage commissioners may issue are not a general liability upon the drainage district or revolve out of any general funds it may have; but they are payable solely out of assessments previously made upon property benefited by the local improvement. . . . It has been held by a number of authorities that such a bond or certificate, so payable, does not constitute an indebtedness against the political division, within the meaning of clauses of the constitutions quite similar to our own.

"In view of the terms of the act and the construction we have given to it," continues the opinion, "we are of the opinion that it does not violate the clause of the constitution which prohibits municipal corporations, counties or political divisions of the state from incurring an indebtedness without an election first being held therefor."

Having held that the grounds of attack upon the constitutionality of the act are not meritorious, the court deems it unnecessary to deal with the questions of estoppel and affirms the judgment of the lower court, all justices concurring.

ATLANTA'S STRIDES FROM DAY TO DAY

That real estate is certain to pick up in the near future, at least within the next 45 days, is strongly indicated by the large number of inquiries being received at real estate offices over the city.

In addition to the unusually large number of inquiries, especially for this season of the year, agents report a number of important sales in the contract form. One agency is now closing out a $10,000 sale, involving semi-residential property. Another agency has $75,000 worth of sales in the contract stage, which will be closed out within the course of a few days, when examinations of titles to properties involved can be completed by attorneys.

In fact, everything considered, the outlook is brighter in real estate than it has been within the past year. Almost every one feels that good business will be done when the fall months arrive.

One agency reports that this July's business has been larger than any previous July's business.

Building Status Excellent.

This month's building to date has been the most encouraging since the outbreak of the European war. Men with money have realized that there is value in the slogan of architects and contractors that "Now is the time to build." Now is the time to build because material men are anxious to sell, and by building now contractors and architects report that owners are saving themselves from 10 per cent to 15 per cent on the purchase of building materials.

A total of $32,000 worth of building permits issued on Saturday boosted the aggregate for July to approximately $542,000.

On Saturday's business was a permit for $32,000 to George Gordon to erect an apartment house at Lee and Oak streets, West End.

Glenwood Avenue Sale.

E. L. Harling, of the E. L. Harling agency, 32 East Alabama street, has sold for H. H. Clark to a customer a six-room bungalow at 250 Glenwood avenue, in the Grant Park section, for a cash consideration of $3,100.

The McLeod-McDaniel property recently taken over by Hamilton Douglas and James L. Logan has been named Roselawn Park by the new owners, who propose subdividing the property, building streets and erecting homes upon it for sale.

M'DUFFIE MUCH STIRRED OVER JUDICIAL CIRCUIT

Proposed Change From Richmond to Toombs to Be Strongly Opposed.

Thomson, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—Much opposition is developing here as a result of the effort being made to place McDuffie county in the Toombs judicial circuit. A strong fight will probably be made in the house to keep the county in the Augusta circuit. Senator Burnside, of Thomson, and the twenty-ninth senatorial district, introduced a bill some two weeks ago to make the change and the bill has passed the senate.

Supporters of Isaac S. Peebles for the judgeship in the last election are strong for the change, and a petition is being circulated and is securing a number of signatures. On the other hand friends of Judge H. C. Hammond are opposed to the move, reeling that it is a direct slap at him. Such is the case in a nutshell, while of course there are "reasons" for and "reasons against" regardless of political affiliations.

Since the last general election two active political factions in McDuffie have been fighting each other. As an indirect result, work was started on the new county jail by injunction proceedings, and the judicial circuit fight is the next in line.

BALDWIN GRAND JURY LAUDS WARDEN SMITH

BY NED McINTOSH.
(Special Staff Correspondent.)

Milledgeville, Ga., July 24.—(Special.) A committee representing the last grand jury of Baldwin county today called upon the governor and the prison commission at the state farm and presented a resolution signed by seventeen of the twenty-two members of the last grand jury commending the high character and efficiency of J. E. Smith, warden of the state penitentiary, who was criticized by Joe Johnson, a recently released convict.

"We, the undersigned citizens of Georgia and ex-members of late grand jury of Baldwin county, wish to express our confidence in Mr. J. E. Smith, who is at present warden of the state farm penitentiary. We have known Mr. Smith for several years and we esteem him as an honest man, an efficient and faithful official and believe that he uniformly endeavors to discharge his duties as warden conscientiously, fearlessly and without favoritism.

Warden Smith today gave out a statement in which he denied charges of maltreatment of prisoners and favoritism at the state farm made in an interview recently given for publication by Joe Johnson, ex-convict of the institution. Warden Smith stated that the ex-convict's real name is not Johnson, but Joe Elders, and that he has served five terms, three of which were in chaingangs and two of which were at the state farm. Warden Smith stated that his information as to the three chaingang terms comes from prisoners who are acquainted with Elders.

BAGPIPE'S ALLURE DRAWS SEVEN SCOTS HOME FROM DEKALB

Decatur, Ga., July 24.—(Special.)—A party of seven Scotchmen from the quarries in and adjacent to Stone Mountain and Lithonia passed through Decatur today en route to New York, where they will take steamer for the old country. The leader of the party was Ivan Macklinson, a veteran of the Boer war. He came to America in 1904 as a member of the company guarding the Boer war spectacle at the St. Louis exposition. From there he drifted south, finally locating in the granite section of DeKalb county.

The entire party are granite cutters. Very near all the vast army of stone cutters at work in this and adjoining counties are skilled Scotch workmen.

Macklinson said today that his party was going home simply on a visit, but with a wink of his eye, remarked that the old call of the bagpipes was more alluring to him than cutting stone. He estimates the number of Scotchmen who have left the granite section for Europe since the beginning of the war at between fifty and seventy-five.

ABDUCTOR OF EMPEY LODGED IN IDAHO JAIL

Idaho Falls, Idaho, July 24.—Lon Dean, a sheep herder, who admits he kidnaped J. A. Empey, was lodged in jail today by cowboys, after a hard ride to get their captive from lynching. Dean was captured on Sheep mountain last night, after Empey had escaped. Dean, a slight man, five feet four inches tall, said:

"I took this means of getting money, as I thought I could do more good with it than those who had it. I had not thought of the anxiety the kidnaping of Empey caused the family."

Dean said he had worked for Empey five years ago and had been planning the kidnaping for some time. After abducting Empey at the point of a gun at his ranch 40 miles from here several days ago, he took him to the cabin on Sheep mountain, five miles from the ranch. Empey's young son was sent to notify the family that Empey would be killed unless a ransom of $6,000 in gold deposited at a designated spot. The ransom was raised yesterday and would have been paid had not Empey escaped while his captor was asleep.

BODY OF BATES FOUND ON THE IRISH COAST

Queenstown, July 24.—A body washed ashore at Kilcolgan Gateway on the Irish coast has been identified from documents found in the coat pocket and from the name on the linen as that of Lindon Bates, Jr., who went down on the Lusitania.

A body recently washed ashore in County Limerick, Ireland, was at first believed to be that of Lindon W. Bates Jr., son of Lindon W. Bates, vice chairman of the American commission for Belgian relief, but later it was said the identification was incorrect.

AUSTRIA CONFISCATES 1915 VEGETABLE CROP

Atlanta is famed for its many tempting eating places, but it took the cooking of Ward Allen, duck hunter, to win the favor of Grayner Neal, well-known tobacco man, of Richmond.

Ward Allen, who lives in Savannah, is a cheerful little man with a whimsical expression, bushy eyebrows, a piratical mustache and wears a Texas sombrero. At first glance you might mistake him for a carnival advance man. But he shoots 5,000 ducks a year for his living.

Grayner Neal is the duck hunter's antithesis in personal appearance, a big, florid man, fond of pretty out clothes and with an air of Wall street. The two men are boon companions. They both quote Shakespeare and Goethe and Ward Allen's stewed hash and crisp bacon whether they are in session or traveling until Avalanche to keep the cavannahan busy.

Ward Allen comes to Atlanta and takes up residence every year when the state legislature is in session. He becomes unofficial chef to the legislature, and his mission is to prevent the general assembly from enacting unconstitutional and otherwise unwise corporatory laws against hunting game. He is the most influential lobbyist at the capitol. He is also known as Neal's more representative than any other. He has been approached by Ward Allen and the game industry in the lobbies of the capitol for five years.

He rents a small bungalow on Forsyth street, near which Neal does his own cooking and housework. Years ago he use to entertain Grayner Neal, Jake Wells and other celebrities of the east in duck hunting camps around Savannah. Allen has always had a weakness for theatricals, having once organized, promoted and managed his own show, that was twenty-five years ago.

Grayner Neal, in the interest of theatrical ventures in Atlanta, was in the city last week. He is financially interested in many theatrical undertakings. One of the first sights to greet his lonely eyes was that of Ward Allen, standing at the stage door of a downtown theater cussing Shakespeare with Hans Lassiley.

Grayer went to the duck hunter's Forsyth street home for bacon, fish roe and eggs, and so far as known all Neal's meals during his stay in Atlanta were cooked by Allen.

FINEST BREEDS OF HEREFORD CATTLE BOUGHT IN FAYETTE

Fayetteville, Ga., July 24.—(Special.) A matter of considerable interest and importance to Fayette county just at this time is a movement started by some of the best citizens and most prosperous farmers here looking toward the raising of fine breeds of cattle, especially those breeds famous as beef cattle.

In this connection a shipment of the finest breed of Hereford cattle has just been received by Redwine Brothers, of this place, who have extensive farming interests in the county upon which they are making preparation to go quite extensively into the cattle industry. The Herefords just received here by Redwine Brothers are of the famous Fairfax breed, and were recently purchased at the big annual cattle sales in Indiana, Illinois and other cattle growing states of the middle west. It is important to note that this breed of cattle is of the highest type of Herefords in this country, being direct descendants of the famous sire, Perfection Fairfax, one of whose sons was brought $5,000 in the recent sales referred to, and was only seventeen months old at the time.

It is believed that cattle raising on the right line will pay in this section, and there seems a general disposition on the part of our farmers to begin a diversified system of farming and cattle raising, looking to an abandonment of cotton as the principal crop, which has proven so uncertain and unsatisfactory in the past.

6TH DISTRICT SCHOOL MAKES FINE SHOWING

Barnesville, Ga., July 24.—(Special.) Prof. W. H. Maxwell, principal of the Sixth District A. & M. school, has just issued the school's catalogue, which makes a fine showing for the work being done there, as it contains numerous illustrations of actual operations in the school and on the farm. The institution is now excellently equipped in every department, and is doing the most practical and helpful sort of work.

Prof. Maxwell has secured the following faculty to assist him for the coming year: Prof. T. O. Galloway, assistant principal; Prof. W. N. Bagwell, Dean, a right man, five feet four inches tall, said:

"I took this means of getting money, as I thought I could do more good with it than those who had it. I had not thought of the anxiety the kidnaping of Empey caused the family."

Dean said he had worked for Empey five years ago and had been planning the kidnaping for some time. After abducting Empey at the point of a gun at his ranch 40 miles from here several days ago, he took him to the cabin on Sheep mountain, five miles from the ranch. PARK MANAGER PLANS PRETTY SCHOOL YARDS

An extension of the activities of the park department to cover the care and development of the grounds surrounding all the public school buildings is the plan of Park Manager Joe Cochran, who will submit the idea to the park board, general council and board of education.

The park department forces are well organized and could, with a sufficient appropriation from council, beautify the school grounds along uniform lines and along the order of the score of public parks. The work, it is said, could also be done at less expense than if undertaken by the board of education.

Mr. Cochran states that it is not his idea to take from the board of education the supervision of the school grounds, but merely to have the park department in charge of the physical development. He says he would need the co-operation of the board in carrying out the plan.

Several members of the board of education are known to favor the plan, and are expected to support it. Mr. Cochran announced that he will ask general council for an appropriation of at least $10,000 when the finance sheet is prepared in January, since that sum will be required to carry the program he has tentatively arranged.

He proposes to secure the services of a landscape architect to make a survey of all the school grounds and to make all improvements along the lines recommended by the architect.

After the first year's work of grading the ground and planting flowers and trees, Mr. Cochran says it would be of little expense to the city to maintain the school parks and keep them in fine condition.

CALIFORNIA POLICE SEARCHING FOR SIMS

Word has been received in Atlanta to the effect that William Sims, grandson of Mr. and Mrs. A. Q. Adams, of 249 Luckie street, and once prominently connected here, is wanted in San Francisco, Cal., on the charge of passing worthless checks on the grandfather in that city.

According to dispatches from San Francisco, Sims came there recently with his bride, a young girl who he claimed had been one of the wealthiest and most prominent young women of Los Angeles. Not long after he had passed the alleged worthless checks at the hotel where he was stopping, he and his wife disappeared.

Mr. Adams, grandfather of Sims, stated to a Constitution reporter Saturday afternoon that he had neither seen nor heard of Sims for several years and did not know anything about him.

According to reports from police headquarters, Sims left Atlanta suddenly two years ago, when he was wanted on the charge of passing worthless checks on the Piedmont hotel. He was also said to have passed worthless checks on his grandfather prior to a warrant being taken out for him here, but Mr. Adams had paid the amount of the check.

According to Mr. Adams, Sims left Atlanta with his mother, Mrs. Lela Sims, and a brother. He stated that they had gone to Dallas, Texas, where the brother and mother live at the present time.

"THE BROKEN COIN" AT ALPHA MONDAY

Billy Beard to Continue to Make Audiences Laugh for Another Week.

Billy Beard continues to delight patrons of the Alpha, and his popularity has reached a height even greater than before. According to announcement, he will be at the Alpha another week.

The fourth installment of "The Broken Coin," "The Face at the Window," is booked for Monday. This episode surpasses in interest the preceding ones, and it affords Grace Cunard and Francis Ford some adventures of gripping interest.

A most unusual picture will be shown here Tuesday. It is called "Behind the Screen," and just as its name implies, it depicts the studio of the great moving picture company.

The general public is interested in motion pictures. It is curious to learn about the home life of the stars. The fair sex all like to hear about handsome Warren Kerrigan and his hunting trips into the mountains, his boxing bouts and his manly, tender regard for his mother. Everyone wants to know if Eddie Lyons and Victoria Forde are just as funny off the stage as they are on the camera. In fact, the public likes nothing better than to have the intricacies and mysteries of film-making explained to them.

Everyone's curiosity will be satisfied when viewing this comedy of many screams.

On the same day Mary Fuller will be seen in a delightful drama of the Canadian woods, "Jean of the Woods." Miss Fuller's appearance on the screen, is always greeted with great pleasure by her legion of admirers.

For Wednesday, "Today and Tomorrow," another of the "Who Pays?" series will be shown. These series of novelettes written by Edwin Bliss are heart-gripping in their intense human interest. In this story the evils resulting from procrastination are clearly shown and the application of the old motto, "Never put off for tomorrow that which you can do today," is unusually forceful as presented in this production.

In such a pleasing manner are these unique novelettes treated that the moral, unconsciously, becomes a part of you. In this story will be found the most strikingly useful moral of any of those yet presented in the series. The phrase, "Do it now," was as meaningless to Julia Monroe, the spoiled child of the rich, as was the word necessity. Her pleasure was the only thing consulted until she learned the word "duty" knew no place in her range of thoughts.

The old adage, "Procrastination is the thief of time," was never more forcibly presented to you than in this interesting story. There have been many series in which the thrill and the spectacle have succeeded in making them popular, but none have so successfully combined moralizing with entertainment as these dramas of the "Who Pays?" series.

The wife of a wealthy Mississippi planter has secured a divorce, the main trouble being that her husband has refused to ride in a buggy drawn by a team of mules. We predict this story will wind up as a Ford advertisement. —The Arkansas Democrat.

"Carmen" Bull Fight Viewed by 20,000 At Los Angeles

Permits to construct an enormous amphitheater with tier on tier of seats had been obtained from the municipal authorities of Los Angeles and on the day the bull fight was held business in the entire section adjacent to Hollywood was suspended.

Ten photographers were engaged at various times and places under the direction of Cecil B. DeMille, director general, in taking the pictures. The scenes depicted included every feature of a gala day, the gathering at the exterior of the bull ring, the march in true Spanish style of the matadors, toreadors and picadores, the arrival of Miss Farrar as Carmen and of Pedro de Cordoba as Escammillo. Several hundred school children lined the path of Miss Farrar, strewing roses in her way.

In the stands, attired in Spanish costumes, were the Lasky stars and executives, Jesse L. Lasky appeared in the box with Miss Farrar, while others in the gathering were city officials, Mr. and Mrs. Morris Gest, Miss Blanche Ring, Miss Fannie Ward, Burton Holmes, the lecturer, Miss Charlotte Walker, Miss Laura Hope Crews, Mrs. Samuel Goldfish, Lou Tellegen, Donald Brian, Thomas Meighan, Miss Blanche Sweet, Carlyle Blackwell and others.

The entire scene was taken with the full consent and co-operation of the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals society. That sup-exciting a sport and one frequently associated with morbidity would be enjoyed under humane conditions was a tribute to the skill of the Lasky forces.

LULU GLASER TO APPEAR ON SCREEN

Lulu Glaser, for years a stage favorite, has answered to the call of the movies. Her signature to a contract with the Universal Film Manufacturing company verifies the report circulated recently in theatrical circles that the well-known prima donna will enter the land of the silent drama and that she will appear on the regular Universal program is now an assured fact. The title of the film has as yet not been decided, but same will be forthcoming in the near future.

Lulu Glaser will be remembered for her remarkable comedy roles in "The Liberty Belles," the play in which she commenced as a chorus girl; "Sweet Ann Page," "The Prima Donna," "Dolly Varden," "The Madcap Princess," "Miss Dolly Dollars," "Miss Dudlesack," "One of the Boys," "The Queen to Visit," "The Girl and the Kaiser" and "Lola From Berlin." In every instance Miss Glaser was a star of the first magnitude and scored instantaneous success. Her work for the films should stand out as prominently as her stage career, and picture fans will have a treat in store for them when they see Lulu Glaser on the Universal program.

The latest of the Universal serials, "The Broken Coin," has set the country talking. From one end of the land to the other it has reached the pinnacle of popular acclaim. Miss Alameda Holcombe Poses In the Movies With Pavlowa

Miss Alameda Holcombe, the Atlanta girl who won in The Constitution beauty contest the trip to the Universal city, and was expected home this month, has accepted a position with the "movies" and is in the cast supporting Anna Pavlowa in the Universal five-reel feature being produced in the Chicago studios under the direction of Lois Weber and Phillip Smalley. The picture is nearing completion, after which Miss Holcombe will return to her home in Atlanta to spend a week or so.

She will return to Universal City, Cal., the home of Universal movies, to become a permanent member of the cast of one of the noted Flying A producing companies.

Miss Holcombe "broke" into the movies while on the trip to San Francisco afforded her by The Constitution Universal beauty contest, of which she was the winner in Georgia. A great girl she is, and a newspaper woman and you know that means a whole lot. A newspaper woman can do anything and go anywhere. Miss Gray grew tired of reporting weddings, pink teas and interviewing suffragettes. Her soul hungered for adventure. Now if a woman looks long enough for a thing she usually finds it. Fifty did in the shape of a broken coin with half of an inscription on it. The only word she could make out was the name Gretchoffen, but the rest looked interesting and Kitty betook her to the staid managing editor of the paper and bet him a year's salary that she would solve the mystery of the broken coin and in addition bring back a crackerjack story. The editor told her she was on, and thus Kitty was thrust into the red-hot little kingdom of Gretchoffen and with all the zeal of a good reporter began the search for the other half of the coin which was to prove so momentous to all the characters in "The Broken Coin."

Dorothy Donnelly Here Thursday in "The Thief."

The Alamo No. 2 has always followed the plan of showing the films that meet with popular favor and Manager Murray has adhered to the principle of satisfying the demands of his patrons.

Beginning Monday, Henry Walthall and Ruth Stonehouse will be featured in a strong three-reel Essanay drama, entitled, "Temper."

The vehicle affords Mr. Walthall splendid opportunity of showing his rare histrionic abilities to splendid advantage. The role fits him to perfection and in it he invests all of his forceful personality.

For Tuesday "The Goddess" will be shown in addition to the usual dramas. As the insistent demand of the hundreds of patrons of Alamo No. 2, "Graustark," George Barr McCutcheon's unrivaled love story, will be seen Wednesday and Thursday, with Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the leading roles.

Dorothy Donnelly in "The Thief," Thursday, will afford those who missed seeing it at one of the local theaters an opportunity of witnessing a play that has aroused more comment than any of the eminent French dramatists' great works. Miss Donnelly's work as the original Madame "X" gave her first place among emotional actresses and the present production she has surpassed all her previous efforts.

Miss Donnelly displays superbly clever acting as the poor, unattractive young woman who becomes attached to a young man, but possessing no wealth or beauty she has no means of attracting his attention, so in order to make herself desirable in his eyes, she steals large sums of money from her friends with which to buy beautiful clothes.

Her thefts are detected, and in a thrilling dramatic climax, she confesses her guilt. Some conception of the elaborateness of the production may be gaified from the fact that the gowns worn by Miss Donnelly are valued at more than $5,000 and were selected from the products of leading modistes in New York, London and Paris.

MARY PICKFORD IS STAR AT MONTGOMERY

Presented in "Tess of the Storm Country" and "Eagle's Mate."

The Montgomery, or Georgian, as it will be called, has some mighty fine things in the way of pictures for its initial attraction.

"Graustark," George Barr McCutcheon's play of kings and intrigues and love, will be featured Monday, with Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne. Tuesday William H. Crane will be seen in "David Harum."

The announcement that Mary Pickford will be the star for Wednesday Thursday, Friday and Saturday will be received by all Atlantans with unbounded pleasure. This piquant, sunshiny beauty has portrayed various roles of late, notably "Rae," in "The Dawn of a Tomorrow." As Little Pal in the play of that name her appealing characterization is still remembered by those fortunate enough to have seen her. Her versatility is remarkable.

There is not an actress on the legitimate or on the screen stage that has won more plaudits than this dainty, winsome young woman has won all over the country. She has a way of entwining herself about your heart-strings that is inimitable. Just Mary Pickford's way.

If Miss Pickford would ever come to Atlanta in person, as she has done in a few instances, at the showing of some of her pictures, this city would do her homage befitting such an idol. She is beloved by millions.

In "Tess of the Storm Country," for Wednesday and Thursday, she portrays a type of womanhood that is capable of appealing to the deepest sympathies of every heart. Her father is given a new trial and this makes Tess' faith in God even stronger. Even when her lover denounces her, her faith in God is unshaken. At last, in a tragically dramatic scene, Elder Graves publicly denounces Tess and the fatherless babe she holds at her breast. But Teola, roused by the father's denunciation of Tess, can remain silent no longer, and in the presence of a big assemblage she takes her baby in her own arms and claims it as her own.

The second five-part story produced by the Famous Players, in which Miss Pickford stars, will be "The Eagle's Mate," for Friday and Saturday. This is another thrilling drama of the mountain country, and Miss Pickford portrays the delightfully fascinating character, Teola Anemone, a dainty elf of beauty, adorably girlish, gloriously feminine.

From her peaceful little valley home, Anemone rises to great heights, and in the strength of that mentality realizes the sternest self-sacrifice for love that later results in the full accomplishment of her womanhood.

BLANCHE SWEET IN "THE CASE OF BECKY"

No woman photoplay star in America has a program for the immediate future so full of promising and meritorious work as that of Miss Blanche Sweet, who appears exclusively in the productions of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play company. Following the extraordinary success of her early Lasky productions Miss Sweet last week was seen for the first time in "The Clue." On August 9 she will appear in "The Secret Orchard," from the play by Channing Pollock, based on the novel of the same name by Agnes and Egerton Castle. Most important, however, is the announcement that she will be the star in the Lasky-Belasco production of "The Case of Becky," by Edward Locke. This play with Frances Starr in the role of Becky, was one of the sensational successes of the dramatic season several years ago as produced by David Belasco. "The Case of Becky" will introduce Miss Sweet in a dramatic role in which she impersonates a dual character, as one moment sweet and lovely; next, mischievous and mean. It will be her second Belasco production, as she appeared in "The Warrens of Virginia."

THE STRAND SECURES NEW BUSHMAN FEATURE

Another interesting program has been arranged at the Strand for the coming week, which, when combined with the fine music furnished by the Strand orchestra and the splendid views drawn through the house by mammoth fans, will make an evening spent there a most enjoyable one. On Monday the special musical number will be the "Anvil Chorus," from "Il Trovatore."

Monday and Tuesday the management has secured another big feature, "Dr. Rameau," with Frederick Perry in the leading role. Wednesday and Thursday Francis X. Bushman will be seen in his latest and best feature, and the first new one in which he has appeared in some time, "The Second in Command." In this picture he is supported by his new leading lady, Marguerite Snow, who has but recently left the Thanhouser company to play opposite Mr. Bushman. She has appeared many times in pictures in the past with her husband, James Cruze, and is well known to Atlanta theatergoers. On Friday Orrin Johnson will be presented in "Satan Sanderson," and on Saturday Mitchell Anderson in "Missing Links of Life."

Frederick Perry, who plays the title role in William Fox's latest dramatic success, "Dr. Rameau," is regarded as one of the foremost dramatic artists of the stage today. Mr. Perry comes to the William Fox organization from his unprecedented personal triumph in "On Trial," in which production he was the bright, particular star. And in his work, more than any other element, lies the success of the many successes of that play, a success that was the more marked in a season where real successes were few and far between.

In "Dr. Rameau" William Fox has given Mr. Perry a vehicle which is stronger, if anything, than anything he has ever played. The title character of Dr. Rameau is a complex one, and the masterly interpretation that Mr. Perry gives it is a part of those that will be remembered as one of the most finished bits of acting ever witnessed.

On Wednesday and Thursday Francis X. Bushman, a well-known star to thousands of patrons of the movies, will make his appearance on the screen in his latest and best feature, "The Second in Command," with Marguerite Snow, another popular favorite, appearing in the role opposite to him. "The Second in Command" is full of action, the kind that every movie fan likes, with a quota of love interest to impel close attention, and will be found to be one of the best pictures of the week. Onward, who portrays Conchita with such telling charm and power, and Jean

An Appreciation.

We have endured player-pianos that tinkle like the family music box that sets on the mantelpiece and play "Sweet Annie Laurie;" we have tolerated so-called automatic sources of music that would make even the drummer in the Salvation Army turn aside in disgust, and we have overlooked Spannish orchestrals because they were not human and couldn't help it themselves, but we were at the ragged edge of our patience until we chanced to discover an ideal source of movie music.

It is easy to imagine an oasis in a dry town or similar desert, but you have to actually happen up on it to appreciate an up-to-date orchestra in a jungle of automatic pianos.

Therefore it was a pleasure indeed for us to while away a number of mellow hours in the Strand theater last week lending ear to Ralph DeBrueller's eight-piece orchestra under the direction of Percy Lorch.

We heard genuine music. It was refreshing, not to mention unusual (although the fact, for Atlanta's sake, should really not be mentioned). When Betty Nansen struggled with her inner self as an innocent man strode to the guillotine, powerless to save himself unless she unlocked the secret of her bosom, there came to our ears solemn classics that touched the chords of our soul even as the picture touched our vision.

And the tune was not "Lonesome Baby," or "This Is the Life," churned from the innards of a tinnish automatic.

We gladly admit that if we were in the business of managing moving pictures we would look for the sensible Mr. DeBrueller for ideas. We have paid several dimes (proof of sincerity in this appreciation) to witness at his theaters pictures that were prosperly framed by the music with which made the pictures all the more impressive and the music all the more enjoyable.

Invention Needed Here

The daily press informs us of a board of massive-minded inventors who are to help prepare America for war. But why turn their inventive channels toward war when invention is so badly needed in the film business?

For instance:

Criticisms.

Conducted by Pansy Panitall.

"The Right of Way."

It is evident that William Faversham had not studied the character of Charlie Steele as immortalized by Sir Gilbert Parker. "Beauty" Steele is one of the most lovable charcters of modern fiction. If Mr. Faversham had sought to portray him as he is revealed in the story, he would have studied him and found that Charlie Steele was a droll, whimsical man of exceeding brilliance, of varying moods.

Faversham would have put into his portrayal any number of touches that would have revealed these characteristics. Instead, he made him a sort of Warrenkerrigan hero.

A character study can be presented on the screen as impressively as in fiction or speaking drama. Directors of the Ince and Griffith type are substantiating this more and more in every drama they produce.

Furthermore, one of the most masterful scenes in "The Right of Way" was eliminated from the screen adaption—the encounter in the wayside saloon, and Charlie Steele's previous conduct with the dimpled barmaid. A presentation of Steele's defiance of the burly, uncouth rivermen in his agnostic religious argument, during which he took joyfully reckless pleasure in chuckling the chin of the lumber camp's idol, the barmaid, would have redeemed the picture from any of the other defects.

Instead of this, Steele steps into the bar, collars his dissolute brother-in-law, steps to the bar and orders a drink from an unseen bartender, and the fight is on.

In behalf of literature and the immortal Charlie Steele, we protest.

One reason "Should a Mother Tell?" was such a success from a box-office standpoint, was that the bulk of its audiences last week were women who went with the expectation of seeing mother tell some blushing sexual secret. As a matter of fact, the picture is wholesome as it is forceful and well acted.

VICTORIA OFFERS THREE WORLD FILMS

Three thrilling World Films are booked at the popular Victoria theater, in addition to their regular Mutuals, Thanhouser and Reliance features. Grace Washburn, the beautiful young star of the London Opera house, will be seen Monday in the World Film offering, "When It Strikes Home."

Charles K. Harris, the writer of innumerable popular songs, is the author of this five-part story that is full of human interest. It begins on old Broadway, the starting place of many real dramas, and depicts the escapades of a young millionaire, Dick Hartley, who is engaged to marry a perfectly respectable girl, but at the end of a convivial evening he forgets all about that and tempted by his friends, foolishly weds an actress for whom he has taken a sudden fancy.

Because he is under age, his father has the marriage annulled without much difficulty, and Hartley marries the young woman in his own social set.

In ignorance of his parentage, the actress little son is adopted by Dick Hartley's wife, who is childless. Twenty years elapse and we find young Victor Hartley as a fashionable lounger and his real mother has become a nurse in the same hospital. A series of dramatic situations develop, the identity of the young doctor is revealed and the mother, realizing that her son's happiness is at stake, effaces herself.

Grace Washburn, as the butterfly dancer and later as the mother and nurse Ursula, does some splendid acting, and Muriel Ostriche, another lovely girl and very clever actress, is featured as the young girl whom Dick marries. Edwin August portrays the leading male role.

"Across the Pacific," one of the famous Charles E. Blaney plays, will be featured Wednesday with an all-star cast.

In this thrilling drama of the Spanish-American war, the dynamic quality that made this one of the most successful melodramas, has been translated so skilfully that those who have seen the play will realize that Mr. Blaney has added greater naturalness to the film-version by using genuine backgrounds for each scene.

"The Lure," for Friday, is another masterly World Film release, dealing with the "pitfalls" that, at times, beset the young woman who is easily lured and who cannot combat the forces that end to her downward path.

A strong play based on the problem that faces the working girl who, having lost her position, is confronted with the fact that she has no means of support. Attempting to remedy her condition, she becomes enmeshed in peculiar circumstances, which, for a time, seem to baffle those interested in her; however, all ends happily.

CHAPLIN IS CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS

They've been arresting Charlie Chaplin imitators around Los Angeles lately. The other day, while Charlie and his company were engaged in producing a picture in the outskirts of the city, there came a scene in which Charlie did not appear, and he took the occasion to wander off to a nearby alley and smoke a cigarette in the cool of its shade.

Whereupon a zealous cop seized the world's greatest by the neck and said: "Come on!"

"Why?" asked Charlie.

"But I am Chaplin!"

The policeman permitted himself a laugh.

"Say, you look about as much like Charlie Chaplin as I do!" he chortled boomingly. "Nix on dat noise. I've seen twenty better'n you. Yer mustache ain't right an' yer nose is on the bum. Come on, March!"

UNIVERSAL FEATURES AT SAVOY THEATER

The Universal's big serial, "The Broken Coin," is attracting more attention than any serial yet put out by them. It is becoming more interesting with each installment and the fourth episode, "The Face at the Window," which will be featured at the Savoy Monday, far surpasses in interest all preceding episodes of the serial. Here Kitty comes in for a new series of adventures in her efforts to get both parts of the coin.

Although Frederick is apparently hostile to Kitty's efforts of possessing the coin, he secretly manifests an affection for her, a development that tends to make this story one of even greater interest.

It will be remembered at the end of the third episode Kitty and the king come down the grand staircase at a critical moment and receive the package containing the broken coin. She and Frederick are both amazed when, upon opening the package, they find that the coin is missing.

Miss Cunard appears in some captivating costumes and her charm is enhanced in these bewitching toilets. It is very evident that she is skilled in the art of dressing, a trait that is of great important for success on the screen as well as on the speaking stage.

The ballroom scene presents a vision of loveliness with gorgeous array of feminine beauty. Just such combinations of superb settings, splendid acting, capable direction and well-laid plot that afford entertainment of a nature equaling, and at times excelling, any stage production.

For Tuesday the management will feature the Gold-Seal drama, "Flight of a Night Bird," with handsome Hobart Henley and Cleo Madison.

Hobart Henley will be remembered for his excellent work in "The Wild Terror," and Cleo Madison is known and beloved by millions. Moving picture fans will go wild over this clever film, as it gives two of their biggest favorites a wonderful opportunity to do some real acting.

Charming Ella Hall and "Bob" Leonard will star in this gripping four-reel drama, dealing with the possibilities of heredity. Can the steel bonds of heritage be broken? Can one break away from the traditions of ancestry? Must the sins of the father's be visited upon the children? Can one rise to the heights of position, wealth and fame after spending childhood days in the very depths of the slums? All these questions are expressively answered in this unique photo-play.

Lardner's Series.

Ring W. Lardner's very comical series of letters in the Saturday Evening Post, which supply the themes of the series of comedies released through World Film corporation, "Letters from Bugs to Gus," embraced some scenes in the baseball part of the Chicago "Cubs." In the early films some of the most prominent players of the Chicago Nationals (the Cubs) were shown. In the pictures: Roger Bresnahan, Shulte, Garry Hermann, President Thomas and others. Baseball fans all over the country will recognize these prominent baseball men.

The World Film corporation, who is producing the Ring Lardner series, have extended the Chicago Cubs' idea of including prominent baseball players in each of the comedies and have secured the sale of exclusive rights to photograph those players in each of the parts of the National league at Pittsburg, Brooklyn, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Boston and Cincinnati.

The Ring Lardner series will be released weekly for twelve weeks.

Already the series has proved extremely popular with motion picture exhibitors and the public. On all sides one hears the catch phrase of Mr. Lardner's exceedingly amusing writings: "You Know Me Al!"

BURR M'INTOSH IN "MY PARTNER"

Burr McIntosh left for the west with a company of thirty people to make the next production for the Burr McIntosh Film corporation.

Old theatergoers, as well as those of today, will be generally interested in this coming production of Bartley Campbell's famous play, "My Partner," which was universally recognized as the greatest melodrama up to the time it was first produced by a remarkable cast of stars at the Union Square theater, Tuesday evening, September 16, 1879.

In the present production nothing has been spared to produce an ideal picture. Mr. McIntosh will visualize "Joe Saunders," the most popular part of the late Louis Aldrich. John Leach, acknowledged to be the best Chinaman on the stage today, will be the Wing Lee, which Charles T. Parsloe made such a classic. Arthur Deagon, whose splendid work in "The Follies" of last year, will do some wonderful open air stunts on the tight rope and rings in the mountains of California. Miss Marie Edith Wells, whose beauty and ability are assisting to make "The Builder of Bridges" so successful, will be Mary Brandon, and Miss Ethel Mantell, Robert B. Mantell's attractive daughter, will be the ingenue. The production will be made by Eugene Sanger, a master in the art of producing high-grade features.

"Colonel Carter of Cartersville, the masterpiece of the late F. Hopkinson Smith, in which Mr. McIntosh impersonates the title role, will be released through the World Film corporation shortly.

Film Gossip.

George Lessey is still on "The Suburban," the famous play being filmatized with King Baggot, Frank Smith and a splendid cast in the familiar roles.

Joseph DeGrass has left the Universal City studios for the mountain country in the vicinity of Fallow's camp, San Gabriel canyon, near Los Angeles, where he is to stage the exteriors in two-reel productions from the pen of Julius Furthman, a well-known writer of short stories. The stories are being staged under the titles, "The Sheriff of Long Butte" and "Mountain Justice." Leo Maloney, Roy McCoy, Elsie Lane Wilson and Arthur Shirley appear in the principal parts.

VIOLET MERSEREAU IN STUNNING GOWNS

News! News!

Violet Mersereau has made a real "scoop." She has arranged a delightful surprise for us by wearing the most gorgeous frocks you ever saw. All of this will happen in "The Wolf of Debt," a three-reel feature directed by Jack Harvey, her new director, and in which Billy Garwood will also star.

The creator of these dresses is the famous Harry Collins, who designs gowns and wraps for Winter Garden shows and many broadway productions, such as "Hands Up," and the Palace theater fashion show.

One was of shaded rose color brocaded satin trimmed with gold lace and a chain of gold beads. It was very bouffant and looked lovely on pretty Violet's slim figure. Another was of lavender brocade trimmed with net and chiffon with a scalloped bodice. But it was the exquisitely lovely boudoir gown which made me fairly gasp. It had a foundation of orange satin covered with a paler shade of the same color in chiffon, while an elaborately embroidered scarf reached the ankles.

Still another frock was a navy blue satin trimmed with yards and yards of blue net edged with narrow bands of satin. Undoubtedly "The Wolf of Debt" will attract attention not only for its strong story, but the wonderful creations which Harry Collins has designed for Miss Mersereau.

"Don't Shoot."

The "unusual weather" has caused the Universal to introduce a new department, the purpose of which is to signal to cameramen on all parts of the 400-acre grounds when not to make exposures. This is accomplished by raising a black flag to the top of the 100-foot pole on the laboratory building. On this are the words "Don't Shoot" in big white letters.

The flag is under operation at the direction of Lee Bartholomew, chief cameraman of the studios.

Plans were made to entertain the Elks of California, at Universal City, recently. Features of the day were a Rodeo on the ranch, followed by a barbecue and a Dutch lunch. Two prohibition bars were installed for the occasion, and a special jail was built where 500 Elks were imprisoned following their arrests on the grounds where they were induced to go as guests of honor. All Los Angeles county dealers in justice accepted the invitations. During the day the proceedies were filmed with visitors playing important parts.

A History of the American People — By WOODROW WILSON

THE FIRE OF PRINCIPLE.

THE law of the American view of taxation was not very sound or clear, but the commonness of it was unassailable; and it rested upon unquestionable and long-standing practice, that best foundation of institutions.

Their governments were no doubt, in law, subject to the government of Great Britain, whatever might be the exact legal right to rule in the colonies also, whether it were the king independent of parliament or the ministers dependent upon parliament.

The revolution of 1688 had radically altered the character of the whole structure, and perhaps the colonies could not, in strict constitutional theory, decline their logical part in the change.

Their governments were from of old, and they meant to keep them intact and uncorrupted. They did not object to the amount or to the form of the tax; they objected only that they had not themselves imposed it. They dissented utterly from the opinion that parliament had the right to tax them at all.

It was that principle, and not the tax itself, which moved them to resist.

English statesmen claimed that the colonists were as much represented in parliament as the thousands of Englishmen in England who did not have the right to vote for members of the commons; and no doubt they were.

The franchise was narrow in England, and not the whole population, but only a few out of some classes of the people were actually represented in the houses.

Were not the interests represented there which America stood for? Perhaps so. But why pretend that such ties through these remote and theoretical representatives when they had, and had always had, immediate and active representatives of their own in their assemblies—as ready and accessible an instrument of government as the house of commons itself?

The colonists were accustomed to actual representation, had for a century and more been themselves part of it, and were not willing now to reverse their history and become, instead of veritable states, merely detached and dependent pieces of England.

Mr. Grenville had not lost his power because he had set the colonies aflame by his hated stamp act. He was, rather, because he king intensely disliked his tedious manners, and resented the dictatorial tone used by his ministers in all their dealings with himself.

The Marquis of Rockingham and the group of moderate whigs who stood with him in the new ministry of July, 1765, had repealed the stamp act, not because they deemed it wrong in legal principle, but because it had bred the slow processes of argument and protest and strictly legal opposition more than he did, and were patient enough to keep within bounds.

Men of every temper and of every counsel made up the various people of the colonies, and there were men of patriotism on both sides of the rising quarrel.

And yet the most moderate and slow-tempered grew uneasy at Mr. Townshend's measures.

Mr. John Dickinson, of Pennsylvania, wrote and published a series of letters—known as the "Pennsylvania Farmer," he called them—which stated as pointedly, as boldly, as earnestly as any one could wish, the whole constitutional rights of self-government which the colonists cherished and thought imperiled by the new acts of parliament—and yet Mr. Dickinson was as steady a loyalist as any man in America, as little likely to countenance rebellion, as was the wisest of those who had wished to compose matters by wise and moderate counsels.

His firm-spoken protests were, in fact, read and pondered on both sides the water (1767) and no one could easily mistake their significance.

The action of the people gave only too grave an emphasis to what their more self-restrained and thoughtful leaders said.

Mr. Townshend's acts were as openly resisted as Mr. Grenville's had been; and every art of evasion, every trick of intelligence, upon every occasion of open and forcible violation, set at naught other restrictions of trade as well.

It was startling to see how rapidly affairs approached a crisis. Resistance centered, as trade itself did, at Boston. When Mr. Townshend's commissioners of customs seized the sloop Liberty in Boston harbor for evasion of the duties, rioters drove them to the fort for shelter, and they sent hastily to England for more troops.

The Massachusetts assembly, under the masterful leadership of Mr. Samuel Adams, protested that the measures of the new ministry were in violation of colonial rights, and protested in terms which, though dignified and respectful enough, were unmistakably imperative.

A SIGN OF THE TIMES.

THE leadership of Samuel Adams was itself a sign of the times.

He was a man of the people, passionate in his assertion of rights, and likely to stir and increase passion in those for whom he spoke. Subtle, a born politician; bold, a born leader of men in assembly or in the street, he was the sort of man and orator whose ascendency may mean revolution almost when he chooses.

The assembly, at his suggestion, went beyond the ordinary bounds of protest and sent a circular letter to the other colonies, as if to invite a comparison of views and a general acquiescence in the course of settled opposition it had itself adopted.

When the ministers in London demanded a withdrawal of the letter, the assembly, of course, refused, and the other colonies were more than ever inclined to stand by the stout Bay colony at whose capital port the fight centered.

The ministers, in their desperate purpose to compel submission, declared their intention to remove to England for trial any one who should be charged with treason—under an almost forgotten statute passed long before Jamestown was settled or English colonies dreamed of in America.

They declared, with a sort of quiet passion, in their session of 1769, that no one but their own assemblies had a right to tax the colonies; that they had the inalienable right to petition the government at home upon any matters of grievance whatever, and to petition, if they pleased, jointly, as a body of colonies united in right and interest: and that any attempt to try a colonist for crime anywhere except in the courts of his own colony and by known course of law was "highly derogatory of the right of British subjects," and not for a moment to be deemed within the lawful power of the crown.

There was no need this time for Mr. Henry. All men were now of the same opinion in Virginia, and the action was unanimous.

The Virginian governor at once dissolved the burgesses; but the members came together again almost immediately in private houses, and there Colonel Washington, whom all the English world had known since Braddock's day, proposed a general agreement by which the colonists bound themselves not to import or use any of the things upon which parliament had laid a tax. Not for a moment to be deemed within the lawful power of the crown.

The ruinous acts of 1766 were to be carried out, and the West India trade, by which Boston merchants and ship owners lived, put a stop to.

These were bitter things to endure. Some grounds must be found from which to defend them—if not the arguments used against the Stamp Act, then others, if need be more radical.

The assembly at once fell back upon far-away subjects to thinking with the eagerness and uneasiness of those who seek by precedents and old opinions which a tax was laid—to see what effect it would have if the English trade—not merely manufactures, which looked to America for a market were starved into a true appreciation of the situation and of the state of opinion among the colonists.

Trade with England for a few months almost stood still, and there was quiet distress and panic among those interested over sea.

They promptly demanded of parliament that the new taxes be taken off and that matters be reverted to fact.

The ministers yielded (April, 1770) —except with regard to the tax on tea. That was the least of the taxes, whatever its principle, and such as it might exercise by the consent of the colonial assemblies—so far had their thought and their defiant purpose advanced within six months.

There were conservative men in the colonies as well as radical men who hated revolution, loved the quiet and sober ways of law; and there was as strong a sentiment of loyalty on one side the sea as on the other.

Mr. Thomas Hutchinson, of Massachusetts, whose house the rioters in Boston had wantonly looted when they were mad against the stamp act, had been a friend both to the colony, and loved her welfare as honestly as any man, but he was lieutenant governor, and stood with the king, and would have deemed it dishonor not to uphold the authority he represented.

Mr. Otis, on the other hand, had resigned his office as advocate general under the crown to resist the writs of assistance.

The public-spirited gentleman who had opposed Mr. Henry's fiery resolution in the Virginia house of burgesses did not fear usurpation or hate tyranny less than he; but they loved the APPROACHING A CRISIS.

EVEN in the midst of the universal rejoicings over the repeal of the stamp act, the temper of several of the colonial assemblies had risen at reading the "Declaratory Act" which accompanied the repeal, and which asserted the absolute legal right of parliament "to bind the colonies in all cases whatsoever."

They had declared very flatly then that parliament had no legal authority whatever to impose taxes such as it might exercise by the consent of the colonial assemblies—so far had their thought and their defiant purpose advanced within six months.

There were conservative men in the colonies as well as radical men who hated revolution, loved the quiet and sober ways of law; and there was as strong a sentiment of loyalty on one side the sea as on the other.

THE FINAL TEST.

AFTER the Boston mob attacked the king's troops quiet could not last long.

The flame was sure somewhere to burst out in the harvest and incidents for a moment stirred excitement.

In North Carolina there was the next year a sudden blaze of open rebellion against the extravagant exactions of William Tryon, the adventurer who was royal governor there; and only blood extinguished it (1771).

In Rhode Island, in June, 1772, his majesty's armed schooner Gaspee was taken by assault and burned, upon a spit of land where she lay aground. It had been her business to watch against infringements of the navigation laws and the vexatious acts of trade; her commander had grown exceedingly insolent in his work; a sloop which he chased had led him on to the spit, where the schooner stuck fast; and the provincials took advantage of her helplessness to burn her.

No one could be found who would inform on those who had done the bold thing; the courageous chief justice of the little province flatly denied the right of the English authorities to order the perpetrators to England for trial; and the royal commission which was appointed to look into the whole affair could get all the colonies once more to a deep irritation.

The faraway house of burgesses in Virginia very promptly spoke its mind again.

It invited the several colonies to join Virginia in forming committees of correspondence in order that all might be of one mind and ready for one action against the aggressions of the government in England.

The ministers in London had meantime resolved to pay the provincial judges, and the colonial governors, out of the English treasury, taxes or no taxes, and the Massachusetts towns had formed a committee of correspondence of their own, as Mr. Adams bade.

Such were the signs of the times when the final test came of the tax on tea.

The East India company was in straits for money. It had to pay twelvepence into the royal treasury on every pound of tea it imported, whether it sold it in England or not; but the government there offered to relieve it of that tax on every pound it carried on to America, and exact only the threepence to be paid at the colonial ports under Mr. Townshend's act; so willing were the king's ministers to help the company, and so anxious also to test the act and the submissiveness of the colonies.

The test was soon made.

The colonists had managed to smuggle in from Holland most of the tea they needed, and they wanted none, under the circumstances, from the East India ships—even though it cost less, with its twelvepence tax off, than the smuggled tea obtained of the Dutch.

The East India company promptly sent ten-laden ships to Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Charleston; and in the autumn of 1773 they began to come in.

At New York and Philadelphia the ships were "permitted" to leave port again without landing their cargoes.

America was evidently of one mind, and had determined not to buy tea or anything else with a parliamentary tax on it.

The colonists would no more submit to Mr. Townshend's tax than to Mr. Grenville's, whatever the legal difference between them might be, either in principle or in operation. The issue was squarely made up; the colonies would not obey parliament—would be governed only through their own assemblies.

If the ministers persisted, there must be revolution.

A PROMOTER OF REVOLUTION.

THE ministers did persist, and there was revolution.

They were encouraged a year from those memorable autumn days of 1773 when the East India company's ships came into port with their cargoes of tea, the colonies had set up a committee of correspondence which looked from the first as if it meant to do things for which there was no law; and which did, in fact, within less than two years after its first assembling, cut the bonds of allegiance which bound America to England.

The committees were not themselves apt or think of it as a body set up to govern them, or to determine their relations with the government at home, but only as a body organized for consultation and guidance, a general meeting of their committees of correspondence.

But it was significant how rapidly, and upon how consistent and executive a plan, the arrangements for "correspondence" had developed, and how naturally, almost spontaneously, they had come to a head in this "Congress of Committees."

There were men in the colonies who were as quick to act upon their instinct of leadership, and apt and masterful at organization, as the English on the other side of the water who had checkmated Charles I; and no doubt, for the most part, the greatest action, and even of aggressive resistance, came more readily to the minds of men of initiative in America, where all things were making and to be made, than in old England, where every form of action seemed antique and venerable.

Mr. Samuel Adams had been deliberately planning revolution in Massachusetts ever since 1768, the year the troops came to Boston to hold the town quiet while Mr. Townshend's acts were put into force; and no doubt he thought the straight way to work to bring it about.

He knew very well how to cloak his purpose and sedulously keep it hid from all whom it might shock or dismay or alienate. But the means he used were not the less audacious because those who acted with him could not see how far they led.

It was he who had stood at the front of the opposition of the Massachusetts assembly to the Stamp Act; he who had directed the circular letter of Massachusetts to the other colonies in 1768 suggesting concert of action against the Townshend acts; he who had gone from the town meeting in Faneuil hall to demand of Hutchinson the immediate removal of the troops after the unhappy "massacre" of March, 1770; he who had led the town meeting which took effectual measures to prevent the landing of the tea from the East India Company's ships.

No man doubted that his hand had been in the plan to throw the tea into the harbor.

It was he who, last of all, as the troubles thickened, had bound the other towns of Massachusetts to stand as in a common organization for making and propagating opinion by means of committees of correspondence.

It was late in 1772 when he proposed to the town meeting in Boston that the other towns of the colony be invited to co-operate with it in establishing committees of correspondence, by means of which they could exchange views, and, if need were, concert action.

The end of November had come before he could make Boston's initiative complete in the matter; and yet how few scant weeks that remained of the year were needed before more than eighty towns had responded.

SOWING THE SEED.

IT had turned out that Samuel Adams had invented a tremendously powerful engine of propaganda for such opinions and suggestions of action as he chose to put upon the wind of the time, and his private correspondence—as he had, no doubt, foreseen, with his keen appreciation of the most effectual means of agitation.

Before, in effect, a league of towns to watch and to control the course of affairs.

There was nothing absolutely novel in the plan, except its formal completeness and its appearance of permanence, as if of a standing political arrangement, a part of the government.

In the year 1765, which was now seven years gone by, Richard Henry Lee, one of the ablest men among his neighbors in Virginia in forming the "Westmoreland association," which drew many of the leading spirits of the great county of Westmoreland together in concerted resistance to the stamp act.

Four years later (1769) the burgesses of Virginia, cut short in their regular session as a legislature by a sudden dissolution proclaimed by their royal governor, met in Mr. Anthony Hay's house in Williamsburg and adopted the resolutions for a general non-importation association which George Mason had drawn up, and which George Washington, Mr. Mason's neighbor and confidant, read and moved.

There followed the immediate organization of the local associations throughout the little commonwealth to see to the keeping of the pledge there taken.

Virginia had no town meetings; each colony took its measures of non-importation and resistance to parliamentary taxation after its own fashion; but wherever there were Englishmen accustomed to political action there was always this thought of free association and quick and organized co-operation in the air, which no one was surprised at any time to see acted upon and made an instrument of agitation.

What made the Massachusetts committees of correspondence especially significant and especially telling in their effect upon affairs was that they were not used, like the "Westmoreland association," or the non-importation associations of 1769, merely as a means of keeping neighbors steadfast in the observance of a simple resolution of passive resistance, but were employed to develop opinion and originate actions from month to month—dilatory, defensive or aggressive, as occasion or a change of circumstances might demand.

The non-importation associations had been powerful enough, as some men had thought to their cost. The determination not to import or use any of the things upon which parliament had laid a tax had been taken of the colonies—wine, oil, glass, paper, tea or any of the rest of the list—was not a thing all men had thought of or spontaneously agreed to.

Certain leading gentlemen, like Mr. Mason and Colonel Washington, deemed it practicable by means of concerted resistance to the mistaken course of the ministry, indeed, influential members of the house of burgesses had planned it, and formed associations to put it into effect—to see to it that no one drank wine or tea when he had been brought in under Mr. Townshend's taxes.

There was here no command of law —only a moral compulsion. Was there any such thing like a common understanding? Had been arrived at by which what should be done when the tea came in—in the lawless defiance of the colonists in the matter? Had thought the ministers in England to such a temper that there were plainly no terms on which exciting subjects of correspondence between the committees, and affairs ran fast towards a crisis.

Teas to the value of no less than £9,000 sterling and pounds sterling had been thrown into the harbor at Boston on the memorable night of the 16th of December, 1773, and the "Cause, Mackintosh," the redoubtable leader of opposition, was promptly in actively in the town, was permitted for the nonce to lead his followers; but what aroused the ministers and put parliament in a heat was not so much the loss incurred by the East India company or the outcry of the merchants involved, as the startling significance of the act, and the unpleasant evidence that all the colonies alike were ready to resist.

Letters from Boston were sent away, or stored safe against sale or present use, or thrown into the harbor, at Philadelphia, Charleston, New York and Boston, as the leaders of the mobs or meetings in each place preferred, there was an instant spread of Virginian methods of action.

Six more colonies hastened to appoint committees of correspondence, and put themselves in touch with communication with the men at Boston and with Williamsburg where were forming opinion and planning modes of redress.

The tea had been shut out at Philadelphia, and the leaders of the people of the colony were not ready yet to lead it into the paths of agitation and resistance.

Not everyone, it is true, was ready to speak quite so plainly or so intemperately as Mr. Vane.

"The town of Boston ought to be knocked about so plainly or so intemperately as Mr. Vane.

"The town of Boston ought to be knocked about its ears and destroyed," he said. "You will never meet with proper obedience to the laws of this country until you have destroyed that nest of locusts."

But, though few were so outspoken, no doubt many found such a view very much to think with, exactly suited to their temper.

PARLIAMENT'S DRASTIC MEASURES.

IN MARCH, 1774, after communicating to the house the dispatches from America, the leaders of the government, now under Lord North, proposed and carried very drastic measures.

By one bill they closed the port of Boston, transferring its trade after the first of June to the custom house of Salem.

Since the headstrong town would not have the tea, it should have no trade at all.

By another bill they suspended the charter of the colony.

By a third they made provision for the quartering of troops within the province, and for the removal of trials growing out of attempts to quell riots to other colonies.

News lingered on the seas in those days, so nothing of the temper in the critical news of what had been done in parliament moved no faster than the east.

But some month, almost upon that very day, Thomas Hutchinson, the consistent-minded governor whom Samuel Adams had tricked into a false step early in the game of politics, left his permanent home in Milton, Massachusetts, as direct and sensible and above ceremony as Samuel Adams himself.

Connecticut's chief spokesman was Roger Sherman, rough as a peasant without, but a statesman within, and a statesman, and in all things a hard-headed man of affairs.

Delaware looked to as sovereign, well-poised speaker and leader of her house of assembly, Thomas McKean, thoughtful author of the famous "Howard Letters" of 1768, a quiet master of statement, and Caesar Rodney, a shrewd well-to-do merchant, represented Pennsylvania.

It was, take it all in all, an assembly of picked men, fit for critical business.

Not that there was any talk of actual revolution to be had.

The seven weeks' conference of the congress disclosed a nice balance of parties. Moderate counsels had the most part, with admirable candor and manliness, declared.

A good deal was said and conjectured about the "brace of Adamses" who led the Massachusetts delegation.

Samuel Adams, now past fifty-two, and settled long ago, with ample set to his life-long business, and pleasure, of popular leadership, which no man understood better, and John Adams, his cousin, a younger man by thirteen years, and once less simple and easier to read, vain and transparent—transparently honest, irregularly gifted.

It was said they were for independence and meant to take the leadership of the congress into their own hands.

If they were for independence they shrewdly clothed their purpose: if they were ambitious to lead, they were prudent enough to forego their wish and to yield leadership, at any rate on the floor of the congress, to the interesting men who represented Virginia, and who seemed of their own spirit in the affair.

A COMMON UNDERSTANDING.

IN the autumn of 1770 Samuel Adams had induced the Massachusetts assembly to appoint a committee of correspondence, to communicate with Mr. Arthur Lee, of Virginia, the colonial agent in London, and with the speakers of the several colonial assemblies; and, though the committee could accomplish little or nothing, he had not been discouraged, but had written the next year to Mr. Lee expressing the wish that "societies" or "the most respectable inhabitants" might be formed in the colonies to maintain a correspondence with friends in England in the interest of colonial privilege.

This is a sudden thought," he said "and drops undigested from my pen; but it must have seemed a natural enough thought to Mr. Lee, whose own vast correspondence—with America, with Englishmen at home, with acquaintances on the continent—had indeed, unaided, made many a friend for the colonies, and was at the same time that it kept the leading men of the colonies informed of the opinions and the dangers impending in England.

It was left for the little county of Hanover—one of many in the Virginian assembly, of whom Richard Henry Lee, Mr. Arthur Lee's elder brother, was one—to think out the plan actually drew the colonies into active co-operation and to give exciting subjects of correspondence between the committees, and affairs ran fast towards a crisis.

Teas to the value of no less than £9,000 sterling and pounds sterling had been thrown into the harbor at Boston on the memorable night of the 16th of December, 1773, and the "Cause, Mackintosh," the redoubtable leader of opposition, was promptly actively in the town, was permitted for the nonce to lead his followers; but what aroused the ministers and put parliament in a heat was not so much the loss incurred by the East India company or the outcry of the merchants involved, as the startling significance of the act, and the unpleasant evidence that all the colonies alike were ready to resist.

Letters from Boston were sent away, or stored safe against sale or present use, or thrown into the harbor, at Philadelphia, Charleston, New York and Boston, as the leaders of the mobs or meetings in each place preferred, there was an instant spread of Virginian methods of action.

Six more colonies hastened to appoint committees of correspondence, and put themselves in touch with communication with the men at Boston and with Williamsburg where were forming opinion and planning modes of redress.

The tea had been shut out at Philadelphia, and the leaders of the people of the colony were not ready yet to lead it into the paths of agitation and resistance.

Members of parliament hardly noticed the event. They thought it foolish; they thought of and chiefly condemned the "rashness" of the colonists.

Not everyone, it is true, was ready to speak quite so plainly or so intemperately as Mr. Vane.

"The town of Boston ought to be knocked about its ears and destroyed," he said. "You will never meet with proper obedience to the laws of this country until you have destroyed that nest of locusts."

But, though few were so outspoken, no doubt many found such a view very much to think with, exactly suited to their temper.

PARLIAMENT'S DRASTIC MEASURES.

IN MARCH, 1774, after communicating to the house the dispatches from America, the leaders of the government, now under Lord North, proposed and carried very drastic measures.

By one bill they closed the port of Boston, transferring its trade after the first of June to the custom house of Salem.

Since the headstrong town would not have the tea, it should have no trade at all.

By another bill they suspended the charter of the colony.

By a third they made provision for the quartering of troops within the province, and for the removal of trials growing out of attempts to quell riots to other colonies.

News lingered on the seas in those days, so nothing of the temper in the critical news of what had been done in parliament moved no faster than the east.

But some month, almost upon that very day, Thomas Hutchinson, the consistent-minded governor whom Samuel Adams had tricked into a false step early in the game of politics, left his permanent home in Milton, Massachusetts, never to return.

Men and bred in Massachusetts, of the stock of the colony itself, he had nevertheless stood steadfastly to his office as the king's representative during Massachusetts best served by the law. He had done more than any one man would have endured, but his sufferings had not blinded him with passion. He knew as well as any man the real state of affairs in the colony—though he looked upon them as governor, not as the people's advocate—and now went to England to make them clear to the ministers.

The prevalence of a spirit of opposition to government in the plantations," he had already written them, "has arisen from the influence of a few great growth of colonies so remote from the seat of empire and the self-fect of oppression in the king of his servants, as the promoters of this spirit. They would have it that the king's people have no security for their rights who were most directly affected.

They were dealing with men more statesmanlike than themselves, who did not need to see their own liberties directly struck at to recognize danger, though it was not yet their own danger.

They had protested in the time of the stamp act, which affected them all: this time they protested even more emphatically against measures aimed as Massachusetts alone.

Virginia, no doubt, seemed to the ministers in England far enough away from Massachusetts, but her leaders acted upon the first news of what parliament had done a month before the text of the obnoxious acts had reached Boston.

THE CALL FOR A GENERAL CONGRESS.

IN MAY, 1774, the Virginia burgesses ordered that June 1, the day the Boston port bill was to go into effect, be set apart as a day of fasting and prayer—prayer that civil war might be averted and that the people of America might be united in a common cause.

Dunmore promptly dissolved them for their pains; but they quietly assembled again in the long room of the Raleigh tavern; issued a call thence to the other colonies for a general congress; and directed that a convention, formed of the whole body of the colony as they themselves had been, should assemble there, in that same room of the Raleigh, on the first day of August following, to take final measures for the defense of their rights and in the common action hoped for in the various quarters.

The next evening they gave a ball in honor of Lady Dunmore and her daughters, at which the governor had previously arranged to do—as if nothing had happened, and as if to show how little of what he had done was with them a matter of personal feeling or private interest, how much a matter of dispassionate duty.

Rhode Island, New York and Massachusetts had already issued a call for a general "Congress of Committees."

The Massachusetts assembly had locked its doors against the governor's messenger, compelled him to dissolve it, until it had completed its call for a committee "to meet the committees appointed by the other colonies and consult together upon the present state of the country."

It was chiefly because Massachusetts called that the other colonies responded, but, of course, with unanimity and almost spontaneous. Virginia and Massachusetts were their real leaders, as the other colonies did; and September saw a notable gathering at Philadelphia, a gathering out which the conservative as well as radicals hoped to see come forth some counsel of wisdom and accommodation.

Not all who attended had been regularly elected by the provincial assemblies. The Virginia delegates had been elected by Virginia's August convention, a body invoked to the first by some of the colonies there had been no timely session of the assembly at which a choice could be made, and represented the colony accordingly. Some appointed by their committees of correspondence, or elected directly by the voters at large, as in some of the smaller places.

But no one doubted any group of delegates real representatives—at any rate, of the predominant political party in their colony.

In New York and Pennsylvania the committees had had the upper hand, and had chosen men who were expected to speak the measures of accommodation and for obedience to law.

In the other colonies, if only for the moment, the more radical party had prevailed, and sent representatives who would stand for colonial rights equivocally for the liberties of the colonies, even at the hazard of uttering words and urging action which might seem revolutionary and defiant.

SOME FAMOUS DELEGATES.

IT WAS noteworthy and significant how careful a selection had been made of delegates to the congress.

No doubt the most conservative group was the group of Virginians: Colonel Washington; that "masterly man," Richard Henry Lee, as Mr. John Adams called him, as effective as Patrick Henry as he had been in the house of burgesses; Edmund Pendleton, who had stood with Mr. Henry in the stamp act and knew nothing but business, and yet showed such winning grace and convincing frankness as a debater; Colonel Harrison, brusque country gentleman, who loved sport and fair living, downright and emphatic; Mr. Bland, silent, dry, formidable at sixty-four, with the steady insight of the lifelong student, and Mr. Peyton Randolph, their leader, a man of commanding spirit whom the congress chose its president, in the full address, and seeming to carry privilege with him as if it had inherited.

South Carolina had sent two members of the stamp act congress of 1765, Christopher Gadsden and Mr. John Rutledge, with Mr. Edward Rutledge also, a youth of twenty-five, and plain Mr. Lynch, a rich planter, as direct and sensible and above ceremony as Samuel Adams himself.

Connecticut's chief spokesman was Roger Sherman, rough as a peasant without, but a statesman within, and a statesman, and in all things a hard-headed man of affairs.

New York was represented by Mr. John Jay—not yet thirty, but of the quick parts of the scholar and the principles of a man of honor.

Delaware looked to as sovereign, well-poised speaker and leader of her house of assembly, Thomas McKean, thoughtful author of the famous "Howard Letters" of 1768, a quiet master of statement, and Caesar Rodney, a shrewd well-to-do merchant, represented Pennsylvania.

It was, take it all in all, an assembly of picked men, fit for critical business.

Not that there was any talk of actual revolution to be had.

The seven weeks' conference of the congress disclosed a nice balance of parties. Moderate counsels had the most part, with admirable candor and manliness, declared.

A good deal was said and conjectured about the "brace of Adamses" who led the Massachusetts delegation.

Samuel Adams, now past fifty-two, and settled long ago, with ample set to his life-long business, and pleasure, of popular leadership, which no man understood better, and John Adams, his cousin, a younger man by thirteen years, and once less simple and easier to read, vain and transparent—transparently honest, irregularly gifted.

It was said they were for independence and meant to take the leadership of the congress into their own hands.

But it turned out different.

If they were for independence they shrewdly clothed their purpose: if they were ambitious to lead, they were prudent enough to forego their wish and to yield leadership, at any rate on the floor of the congress, to the interesting men who represented Virginia, and who seemed of their own spirit in the affair.
